THE MYTHS AND TRUTHS OF EXTRATERRITORIAL TAXATION

Laura Snyder*

The 1924 U.S. Supreme Court decision Cook v. Tait is considered to underpin the U.S. extraterritorial tax system. It is cited with statements such as “it is settled law” that the U.S. Constitution permits the federal government to tax the worldwide income of nonresident U.S. citizens. But in the century since Cook was decided, both U.S. citizenship and the U.S. tax system have developed and expanded, as have our understandings of equal protection and human rights.

As compared to 1924, today many more overseas Americans are subjected to a nationality-based extraterritorial system that severely penalizes activities required to sustain modern life. The activities include owning a home, holding a bank account, investing and planning for retirement, operating a business, holding certain jobs, and pursuing community service opportunities. Neither U.S. residents (regardless of nationality) nor non-U.S. nationals residing overseas are subjected to such a penalizing system.

While Cook may hold that the federal government has the power to tax overseas Americans based upon their worldwide income, it is a myth that Cook allows the government to tax overseas Americans under any conditions, without any regard for the effects the policies have and in manners that violate their Constitutional and human rights.

Cook is ripe for revisiting. The U.S. extraterritorial tax system is unique in the world. Other countries offer examples of alternative systems that protect against tax abuse while also respecting fundamental rights.

INTRODUCTION .......................................................... 187
I. COOK’S HISTORICAL CONTEXT: AN OVERVIEW ............. 189

* University of Westminster Law School (Ph.D., 2018); TRIUM Executive MBA (2006); University of Paris 1–Panthéon-Sorbonne (DEA droit privé, 1996); University of Illinois College of Law (J.D., 1994). Member of the bars of New York, Illinois, and Paris. Co-founder of Stop Extraterritorial American Taxation (“SEAT”) and member of the Board of Directors of the Association of Americans Resident Overseas (“AARO”). Former international member of the Taxpayer Advocacy Panel (“TAP”). The Author thanks Karen Alpert, John Richardson, and Bryan Camp for their invaluable assistance. The Author further thanks editorial team of the Cornell Journal of Law and Public Policy for their important improvements and suggestions.
II. Expansion of the Tax System and of Citizenship, and the Protection of Citizenship from Forced Expatriation ........................................ 194
   A. Expansion of U.S. Tax System ........................................ 194
   B. Expansion of U.S. Citizenship ......................................... 196
   C. Protection Against the Forcible Destruction of Citizenship ........................................ 199

III. Expansion of Equal Protection ........................................ 203
   A. Distinctions Based Upon Country of Origin Are Inherently Suspect ........................................ 205
      1. Compelling Governmental Interest? ................................. 210
         a. The U.S. Extraterritorial Tax System Threatens the Sovereignty of Other Countries and Violates Their Right to Self-Determination ........................................ 213
         b. The United States is Unable to Administer its Extraterritorial Tax System ........................................ 214
      2. Narrowly Tailored Classification? ................................. 216
      3. Summary ......................................................... 218
   B. Law Cannot Create a Second Class of Citizens ................. 218
   C. Animus is Per Se a Constitutional Wrong ........................... 223
      1. 1860s: The Origins of the Income Tax ............................ 226
      2. 1890s: The Reinstatement of the Income Tax .................. 227
      3. 1990s: The Exit Tax ........................................... 227
      4. Legal Titles and Terminology .................................... 230
   D. Law Must Rationally Relate to a Legitimate Public Interest ........................................ 232
      1. The Taxation of Overseas Americans on an Ongoing Basis ........................................ 232
      2. FATCA ......................................................... 234
      3. Exit (Expatriation) Tax ........................................... 236
      5. Summary ......................................................... 246
   E. An Alternative Perspective on Equal Protection .................. 246

IV. Signature and Ratification by the United States of Multiple Human Rights Instruments .................... 248
   A. The Right to Leave One’s Country .................................. 249
   B. The Right to Work, Free Choice of Work and Freedom from Discrimination in Work .......................... 252
   C. Equality in Dignity and Rights .................................... 254
   D. Freedom from the Arbitrary Deprivation of One’s Nationality and the Right to Return to One’s Country ........................................ 257
E. The Right of Self-Determination ......................... 261
V. Adoption of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights .......... 263
  A. The Substance of the U.S. Extraterritorial Tax System Violates TBOR ......................................... 264
  B. The Failed Administration of the U.S. Extraterritorial
     Tax System Violates TBOR ............................ 265

CONCLUSION: TAXING IN RESPECT OF RIGHTS .......... 267

TABLE 1: CONTRASTING U.S. TAXATION IN 1924 AND 2019 ...... 191
TABLE 2: CONTRASTING LOSS OF U.S. CITIZENSHIP BY OPERATION
OF LAW IN 1924 AND 2019 ............................. 193
TABLE 3: FORCED EXPATRIATIONS PER YEAR, 1945 TO 1977 .... 200
TABLE 4: RENUNCIATIONS PER YEAR, 1996 TO 2020 ......... 200
TABLE 5: OVERSEAS AMERICANS RELEGATED TO SECOND CLASS
CITIZENSHIP ............................................. 221
TABLE 6: COMPARISON OF IRS SERVICES FOR U.S. RESIDENTS AND OVERSEAS AMERICANS AND RESULTING VIOLATIONS OF THE TAXPAYER BILL OF RIGHTS .................. 266

INTRODUCTION

As John F. Kennedy said in his 1962 Commencement Address at Yale University: “The great enemy of truth is very often not the lie – deliberate, contrived and dishonest – but the myth – persistent, persuasive and unrealistic.”

Kennedy continued: “Too often we hold fast to the clichés of our forebears. We subject all facts to a prefabricated set of interpretations.
We enjoy the comfort of opinion without the discomfort of thought.”

For over a hundred years, Americans living overseas have been the casualties of myth after myth: about who they are, about why they live overseas, about how they are taxed by the United States, and about the righteousness of how the United States taxes them. The first of these myths dates back over a hundred years; since that time the old myths have been renewed and perpetuated while new ones have been developed and propagated.

---

1 John F. Kennedy, Commencement Address at Yale University (June 11, 1962), https:// www.jfklibrary.org/archives/other-resources/john-f-kennedy-speeches/yale-university-19620611.
2 Id.
3 See generally Laura Snyder, The Criminalization of the American Emigrant, 167 Tax Notes Fed. 2279 (June 29, 2020) (hereinafter “Criminalization”); Laura Snyder, Taxing the Richardson, The United States Imposes a Separate and Much More Punitive Tax on U.S. www.taxconnections.com/taxblog/the-united-states-imposes-a-separate-and-more-punitive-tax-system-on-us-dual-citizens-who-live-in-their-country-of-second-citizenship/
(hereinafter “More Punitive”); Karen Alpert, Investing with One Hand Tied Behind Your Back—An Aus-
Decided in 1924, Cook v. Tait is considered a seminal case establishing the power of the federal government to tax overseas Americans based upon their worldwide income. But just how far does that power go? That question has not been explored. Instead, in the nearly 100 years since Cook was handed down, a myth has developed. The myth, typically implied rather than expressly stated, is that Cook allows the federal government to impose any taxation upon overseas Americans regardless of the circumstances and without any constraints.

Given how dramatically the circumstances of overseas taxation have changed and how damaging U.S. tax and banking policies are for overseas Americans, it is imperative to challenge the myth of Cook v. Tait. It is imperative to challenge the conditions under which the United States taxes its overseas citizens.

To challenge the myth, this paper begins by (II) providing an overview of Cook’s historical context. This paper then describes how the conditions of overseas taxation have changed during the century since Cook was decided and how, because of these changes, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system today violates multiple fundamental rights. This includes: (III) the expansion of both the U.S. extraterritorial tax system and U.S. citizenship, together with the judicial protection of U.S. citizenship; (IV) the expansion of equal protection; (V) the signature and ratification by the United States of multiple human rights instruments; and (VI) the adoption of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights. This paper concludes with (VII) a description of how the United States can tax persons outside the country in a manner that respects their constitutional and human rights. Appendix A contains a detailed timeline demonstrating the evolutions of U.S. extraterritorial taxation and banking, citizenship, and equal protection policies, in parallel.

---

I. Cook’s Historical Context: An Overview

In 1924, the year Cook was handed down, the situation of overseas Americans was considerably different as contrasted with today. This was the case both as regards the components of the U.S. tax system as well as who was subject to it. As a result of these differences, the consequences of Cook for Americans overseas in 1924 were quite different from what they are today.6

Table 1 demonstrates that in 1924, filing thresholds and exemptions were high relative to average incomes for the time. As a result, few – as little as 6.56% of the American population – filed a tax return, let alone paid any federal income tax. Further, the tax system itself was considerably less complex and less penalizing, especially for overseas Americans.8 Notably, in 1924 there were none of the reporting requirements or penalizing taxation with respect to foreign corporations, mutual funds (PFICS), non-U.S. retirement accounts (foreign trusts), or phantom gains that exist today.9 There were no reporting requirements for non-U.S. financial accounts, let alone draconian penalties for failure to report.10 Nor was there any tax penalty, exit tax, or renunciation fee in the event of expatriation.11

Further, as Table 2 demonstrates, in 1924 many if not most Americans who lived outside the United States for anything more than a short period lost their U.S. citizenship by operation of law.12 This was especially the case for naturalized U.S. citizens and women who married non-U.S. citizens; they lost their U.S. citizenship after residing outside the United States for either two or five years, depending upon the country where they resided. American children born and residing outside the United States lost their U.S. citizenship if, upon turning 18, they did not record at a U.S. consulate their intention to reside in United States and retain U.S. citizenship and take an oath of allegiance to the United States.13 In essence, in 1924 the only Americans who could reside overseas on a long-term basis without losing their U.S. citizenship by opera-

7 I.R.S., STATISTICS OF INCOME FROM RETURNS OF NET INCOME FOR 1924 (1926), at 4.
8 See infra Table 1.
9 Id.
10 Id.
11 Id. For descriptions of these policies, see Richardson, supra note 3; Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 304-313, 326-344; see also Shu-Yi Oei, The Offshore Tax Enforcement Dragnet, 67 Emory L. J. 655 (2018). As regards changes adopted in 2017 regarding the regime for foreign corporations, see Patrick Riley Murray, Size Matters (Even If the Treasury Insists It Doesn’t): Why Small Taxpayers Should Receive a De Minimis Exemption from the GILTI Regime, 106 MINN. L. REV. 1625 (2022).
12 See infra Table 2.
13 Id.
tion of law were those who: (i) were natural-born U.S. citizens, (ii) did not naturalize in another country, and (iii) in the case of women, did not marry a non-U.S. citizen. The many overseas Americans who did not meet all three of these requirements lost their U.S. citizenship and thus were no longer subject to the U.S. extraterritorial tax system.14

In sum, in 1924 not only was the U.S. tax system considerably less complex and less penalizing than it is today, especially for overseas Americans, but also it did not concern many overseas Americans because they lost U.S. citizenship by operation of law. Today the U.S. extraterritorial tax system is highly complex and penalizing. It concerns all overseas Americans except those who take the active step to renounce U.S. citizenship, thereby not only losing their U.S. citizenship but also incurring a high renunciation fee as well as, depending upon their circumstances, a penalizing exit tax.15 Because of these dramatic developments, Cook’s impact today is more far-reaching and consequential than could have been imagined in 1924.

14 See id.
Table 1: Contrasting U.S. Taxation in 1924 and 2019

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Average annual household income</td>
<td>$2,196\textsuperscript{16}</td>
<td>$68,703\textsuperscript{17}</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Filing thresholds</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Single: $5000 gross or $1000 net</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Married couple: $5000 gross or $2500 net\textsuperscript{18}</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Exemptions/Standard deductions</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Single: $1000 Head of family or married couple: $2500 Each dependent: $400\textsuperscript{20}</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Single or Married filing separately: $12,200 Married filing jointly or Qualifying widow(er): $24,400</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Head of household: $18,350\textsuperscript{21}</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number of households</td>
<td>24,351,676\textsuperscript{22}</td>
<td>120,756,048\textsuperscript{23}</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Number of returns filed</td>
<td>7,369,788\textsuperscript{24}</td>
<td>157,705,360\textsuperscript{25}</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>% of households filing a return\textsuperscript{26}</td>
<td>30.26%</td>
<td>130.6%\textsuperscript{27}</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

\textsuperscript{19} I.R.S., TAX YEAR 2019 - 1040 AND 1040-SR INSTRUCTIONS 9 (2020); different thresholds apply in the case of taxpayers over age 65. Id.

\textsuperscript{24} I.R.S., STATISTICS OF INCOME FOR 1924, supra note 7, at 116, 272.

\textsuperscript{26} This is calculated by dividing the number of returns filed by the number of households.

\textsuperscript{27} Data indicates that for many U.S. households more than one income tax return is filed. This might be explained by some households including unmarried couples or adult children, which would require multiple returns in a single household.
Average income per return

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>$3,481</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>$76,668</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Lowest / highest tax bracket

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2% / 46%</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10% / 37%</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Reporting and taxation of non-U.S. source income of non-U.S. corporations (CFCs)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yes (via U.S.-person shareholder)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Reporting and taxation of retirement accounts (foreign trusts)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Reporting and punitive taxation of mutual funds / passive foreign investment companies (PFICs)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Taxation of phantom gains

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Reporting of non-U.S. financial accounts and penalties for failure to report

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Expatriation/exit tax

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Renunciation fee

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1924</th>
<th>2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>No</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yes</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

28 I.R.S., Statistics of Income for 1924, supra note 7, at 4, Column “Average net income per return.”

29 I.R.S., SOI Tax Stats — Historic Table 2, supra note 25, form titled “Total File, All States,” Total adjusted gross income $12,090,994,318,000 [Cell B27] divided by Total number of returns 157,705,360 [Cell B9].

31 I.R.S., Tax Year 2019 Instructions, supra note 21, at 104.

32 The Revenue Act of 1962 introduced Subpart F to the IRC and expanded the definition of “Controlled Foreign Corporation” (CFC) to include not just corporate shareholders of foreign companies, but also individuals. See Appendix A, infra note 556 and accompanying text.

33 The Revenue Act of 1962 introduced the first requirements for filing of informational returns for foreign trusts. See Appendix A, infra notes 557-558 and accompanying text.

34 The Tax Reform Act of 1986 introduced the first PFIC rules imposing penalizing taxation on foreign mutual funds. See Appendix A, infra notes 591-592 and accompanying text.

35 Revenue Ruling 90-79 ruled that persons who sell their home outside the United States are subject to tax on any “phantom income” that may result because of changes in the value of the currency with which the home was purchased and sold as compared to the U.S. dollar. See Appendix A, infra notes 593-597 and accompanying text.

36 The Bank Secrecy Act of 1970 introduced FBAR, and the HIRE Act of 2010 introduced FATCA. See Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3, at 2282-87; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3, at 306-10. See also Appendix A, infra notes 566, 615 and accompanying text.

37 The Foreign Investors Tax Act of 1966 introduced the first expatriation tax, and the Heroes Earnings Assistance and Relief Tax Act of 2008 introduced the first exit tax. See infra notes 282-300 and accompanying text. See also Appendix A, infra notes 563, 606-607, 614 and accompanying text.

38 The Schedule of Fees for Consular Services issued in 2010 introduced the first fee for the issuance of a Certificate of Loss of Nationality. See Appendix A, infra note 619 and accompanying text.
Table 2: Contrasting Loss of U.S. Citizenship by Operation of Law in 1924 and 2019

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Categories of persons</th>
<th>In 1924</th>
<th>In 2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. Persons who acquire citizenship of another country by naturalization</td>
<td>Yes\textsuperscript{39}</td>
<td>No\textsuperscript{40}</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. Naturalized U.S. citizens who reside for more than 2 years in originating country</td>
<td>Yes\textsuperscript{41}</td>
<td>No\textsuperscript{42}</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. Naturalized U.S. citizens who reside for more than 5 years in any other country (other than originating country)</td>
<td>Yes\textsuperscript{43}</td>
<td>No\textsuperscript{44}</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. Women who marry a non-U.S. citizen and reside overseas for 2 years in the country where her husband is a citizen</td>
<td>Yes\textsuperscript{45}</td>
<td>No\textsuperscript{46}</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. Women who marry a non-U.S. citizen and reside overseas for 5 years in any other country (other than the country where her husband in a citizen)</td>
<td>Yes\textsuperscript{47}</td>
<td>No\textsuperscript{48}</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

\textsuperscript{40} In 1990, the U.S. Department of State issued an information sheet entitled “Advice about Possible Loss of U.S. Citizenship and Dual Nationality.” It confirmed the position taken by the Supreme Court in\textit{ Vance v. Terrazas} (444 U.S. 252 (1980)) that dual nationality was not a reason for expatriation. The sheet specified that there is a presumption that persons who naturalize in another country intend to retain U.S. citizenship.\textsuperscript{41} See also Appendix A, infra notes 525, at 108-9. See also Appendix A, infra notes 598-599 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{41} Expatriation Act of 1907 § 2, 34 Stat. at 1228, and later the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 §§ 352-54, 66 Stat. at 269-72 (specifying three years rather than two). Such a person was presumed to have ceased being an American citizen. The presumption could be overcome upon presentation of “satisfactory evidence” to a consular officer.\textsuperscript{42} See Appendix A, infra notes 525, 545 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{42} In 1964 in\textit{ Schneider v. Rusk}, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the relevant provision of the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 was violative of due process under the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution.\textsuperscript{43} Schneider v. Rusk, 377 U.S. 163, 164, 168-69 (1964). See infra notes 75-77 and accompanying text.\textsuperscript{44} See also Appendix A, infra note 560 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{43} See supra note 41.

\textsuperscript{44} See supra note 42.

\textsuperscript{45} Married Women’s Independent Nationality Act (also referred to as the Cable Act), Pub. L. No. 67-346, § 3, 42 Stat. 1021, 1022 (1922).

\textsuperscript{46} Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 § 357, 66 Stat. at 272 (ending for women the automatic loss of U.S. citizenship by reason of marriage to an alien and residence overseas).

\textsuperscript{46} See supra note 45.

\textsuperscript{47} See supra note 46.
II. EXPANSION OF THE TAX SYSTEM AND OF CITIZENSHIP, AND THE PROTECTION OF CITIZENSHIP FROM FORCED EXPATRIATION

As the overview in Part II above demonstrates, since Cook was decided, both (A) the U.S. tax system and (B) U.S. citizenship have greatly expanded. This Part analyzes their expansion in greater detail as well as (C) the steps taken by the U.S. Supreme Court to ensure protection against the forceable loss of U.S. citizenship.

A. Expansion of U.S. Tax System

At the time Cook was decided, the U.S. tax system bore little resemblance to what it is today. It was considerably simpler, as evidenced by the length of the tax codes. The Revenue Act of 1924 was 103 pages, and its accompanying Regulations 65 was 163 pages, for a total of 266 pages. Today the Internal Revenue Code and its accompanying regulations are so long it is difficult to measure their precise length; in 2012 the National Taxpayer Advocate estimated the combined Code and Regulations at approximately 4 million words, or 9,000 pages.

Further, how the United States taxed overseas Americans bore little resemblance to how it does so today. In 1924 there were no information-only reporting requirements, and thus no penalties connected with failure to file purely informational forms. Nothing in the Revenue Act of 1924 specifically targeted non-U.S. source income with taxation more penalizing than that applied to U.S. source income. Foreign trusts were not

---

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Categories of persons</th>
<th>In 1924</th>
<th>In 2019</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>6 Children born outside the United States as U.S. citizens and residing overseas who, upon their 18th birthday, do not record at a U.S. consulate their intention to reside in the United States and retain U.S. citizenship and take an oath of allegiance to the United States</td>
<td>Yes 49</td>
<td>No 50</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

49 Expatriation Act of 1907 § 6, 34 Stat. at 1229.
50 After 1924, U.S. nationality law evolved to require U.S. citizen children born overseas to live in the United States before a specified age and for a minimum number of years to retain U.S. citizenship. All such requirements were ended in 1978. See Appendix A, infra note 578 and accompanying text.
52 Or, including its frontmatter, 179 pages. Regulations 65, supra note 18.
taxed, and foreign corporations were taxed based only upon their U.S. source income.54

The transformation of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system from its relatively benign beginnings in the early twentieth century to the expansive, complex, and highly penalizing system that it is today did not happen all at once. It happened progressively over several decades, beginning with seemingly small changes that, at the time, might have appeared harmless to all but the most attentive. For example, when the Kennedy Administration created the Subpart F regime in 1962,55 who could have predicted that its evolution, most recently culminating in the 2017 Tax Cuts & Jobs Act and under the guise of the Transition Tax,56 would have the effect of eliminating large portions of the retirement savings of Americans operating small businesses in Canada?57 When the same Revenue Act of 1962 introduced the first informational reporting requirements for foreign trusts,58 who could have predicted that the evolution of the requirements would result in overseas Americans today facing IRS-imposed penalties ranging from $10,000 to $110,00059 for failure to meet an unclear filing deadline for a merely informational form pertaining to their state-sponsored retirement and other investment plans?60

Appendix A contains a timeline detailing step-by-step how, over more than a century, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system transformed from relatively narrow and benign to expansive, complex, and highly penalizing for overseas Americans.61 It did this by the progressive, deliberate targeting and punishing of income, investments, and financial accounts that, while for U.S. residents may be “foreign,” for overseas Americans are domestic and necessary for modern life.

54 Revenue Act of 1924 § 233(b), 43 Stat. at 283.
55 Supra note 32 and Appendix A, infra notes 556, 573 and accompanying text.
56 Appendix A, infra notes 628-629 and accompanying text. A high-profile case concerning the Transition Tax is currently before the Supreme Court, Moore v. United States, No. 22-800 (U.S.). See, e.g., Andrew Velarde, Supreme Court to Hear Transition Tax Case with Vast Implications, 180 TAX NOTES FED. 125 (July 3, 2023).
58 See Appendix A, infra notes 557-558 and accompanying text.
61 Infra notes 515-638 and accompanying text, left column “Taxation.”
B. Expansion of U.S. Citizenship

As the reach and the nature of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system has changed since Cook, so has the reach and nature of U.S. citizenship, although not in the same progressive manner. Instead, after 1924 U.S. citizenship first contracted before, a few decades later, considerably expanding and becoming more fixed in nature.

The contraction came with the Nationality Act of 1940 and the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952. These Acts codified the highly fluid nature of U.S. citizenship as something one could have, lose, and, in some cases re-gain depending upon multiple life circumstances. Circumstances for losing U.S. citizenship included: residing outside the United States for an extended period, reaching 16 years of age while residing outside the United States, and the expatriation of a parent. A long list of expatriating acts included: naturalization in another country, making an oath of allegiance to another country, voting in a foreign election, serving in the armed forces of another country, and desertion of the U.S. military. And as was already the case at the time of Cook, special expatriating provisions continued to apply to naturalized U.S. citizens: they were considered to have lost U.S. citizenship if they resided in their originating country for three years (in some cases two) or in any other country for five years.

These Acts had considerable impact. Data covering the period 1945 to 1967 (the year, as discussed below, Afroyim was decided), shows that an average of 4,096 Americans per year were non-voluntarily expatriated (lost their U.S. citizenship by operation of law).

Patrick Weil tells the story of how U.S. Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren battled for more than a decade to protect U.S. citizenship from 62 See Appendix A, infra notes 538-539 and accompanying text.

---

63 See Appendix A, infra notes 545-546 and accompanying text.
64 For example, a woman who had lost her U.S. citizenship by reason of a marriage to an alien could, upon the termination of that marriage and subject to certain other conditions, regain U.S. citizenship. Nationality Act of 1940, Pub. L. No. 76-853, § 317(b), 54 Stat. 1137, 1146-47; Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, Pub. L. No. 82-414, § 324(c), 66 Stat. 163, 246-47.
65 Appendix A, infra notes 515-638, 538, 545-546 and accompanying text. See also HERZOG, infra note 525 at 45-50.
67 Infra note 79 and accompanying text.
68 See PATRICK WEIL, THE SOVEREIGN CITIZEN 198-99 (2012). This is calculated after removing from the total count of expatriated persons the number of persons listed as having renounced U.S. citizenship (an average of 265 persons per year from 1945 to 1967). See also Table 3, infra text accompanying note 90. forced expatriation.\textsuperscript{69} The highlights of this work include these three seminal U.S. Supreme Court decisions:

\textit{Trop v. Dulles} (1958):\textsuperscript{70} In 1944 Private Albert L. Trop escaped from a U.S. Army stockade in Morocco. He was gone less than a day and surrendered when he was walking back towards his base. He was, nevertheless, convicted of desertion. His later application for a passport was denied on the grounds that under the Nationality Act of 1940 he had lost his citizenship due to desertion.\textsuperscript{71}

The Court ruled the relevant section of the Nationality Act of 1940 violated the 8th Amendment as a cruel and unusual punishment.\textsuperscript{72} In the decision, Warren described the importance of citizenship for all other rights, stating:

\begin{quote}
[With] denationalization [. . .] there may be involved no physical mistreatment, no primitive torture. There is instead the total destruction of the individual’s status in organized society. It is a form of punishment more primitive than torture, for it destroys for the individual the political existence that was centuries in the development. The punishment strips the citizen of his status in the national and international political community [. . .] the expatriate has lost the right to have rights.\textsuperscript{73}
\end{quote}

\textit{Schneider v. Rusk} (1964):\textsuperscript{74} Angelika L. Schneider was born in Germany. As a child she moved to the United States and became a naturalized U.S. citizen along with her parents. As an adult, she moved back to Germany. Her 1959 application for a U.S. passport was denied on the grounds that she had lost her U.S. citizenship because she had returned to live in her country of origin for more than three years.\textsuperscript{75}

The Court held that the law cannot create a second class of citizens – that since no rule deprived natural-born Americans of their citizenship because of extended or permanent residence overseas, it was unconstitutionally discriminatory and a violation of Fifth Amendment due process to apply such a rule only to naturalized citizens.\textsuperscript{76} The Court further

\begin{quote}
\textsuperscript{69} Patrick Weil, \textit{Can a Citizen be Sovereign?}, 8 \textit{Humanity} 1, 3-12 (2017). See also \textbf{Weil, The Sovereign Citizen, supra note 68}, at 111-75.

\textsuperscript{71} Id. at 87. See Appendix A, infra note 551 and accompanying text. See also \textbf{Weil, Can a Citizen be Sovereign?}, supra note 69, at 4; \textbf{Weil, The Sovereign Citizen, supra note 68}, at 146-47.

\textsuperscript{72} Trop, 356 U.S. at 99-103.

\textsuperscript{73} Id. at 101-02. See also Appendix A, infra note 551 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{74} Schneider v. Rusk, 377 U.S. 163 (1964).

\textsuperscript{75} Id. at 164. See also Appendix A, infra note 560 and accompanying text. See also \textbf{Weil, The Sovereign Citizen, supra note 560}, at 169-71.

\textsuperscript{76} \textbf{Schneider}, 377 U.S. at 168-69.
\end{quote}
stated: “Living abroad, whether the citizen be naturalized or native born, is no badge of lack of allegiance and in no way evidences a voluntary renunciation of nationality and allegiance. It may indeed be compelled by family, business, or other legitimate reasons.”

Afroyim v. Rusk (1967): Beys Afroyim, a naturalized U.S. citizen, moved to Israel where he voted in an election. The U.S. Department of State later refused to renew his passport, claiming he had lost his U.S. citizenship because of his participation in a foreign election. The Court rejected this claim, holding that Congress may not do anything to “abridge or affect” citizenship conferred by the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Afroyim Court further held:

[T]he Fourteenth Amendment was designed to, and does, protect every citizen of this Nation against a congressional forcible destruction of his citizenship whatever his creed, color, or race. Our holding does no more than to give to this citizen that which is his own, a constitutional right to remain a citizen in a free country unless he voluntarily relinquishes that citizenship.

With Afroyim, the U.S. Supreme Court made it clear: U.S. citizenship is safeguarded under the Fourteenth Amendment. Congress may not take it away from a person who does not want to give it up. Congress may not even take actions that “abridge or affect” citizenship.

The effect of Afroyim and, more generally, Chief Justice Warren’s work to protect U.S. citizenship, was to considerably expand U.S. citizenship among Americans living overseas. No longer are American women who marry non-citizens and who live with their spouses outside the United States considered to have lost their U.S. citizenship. No longer are their children born and living outside the United States considered to have lost U.S. citizenship upon reaching adulthood. No longer are children born in the United States to two non-citizens and who, while still children, return to their parents’ home country, considered to have lost U.S. citizenship upon reaching adulthood. Today, thanks to the tireless work of Chief Justice Warren and others, all these persons living outside of the United States on a long-term basis retain U.S. citizenship.

77 Id. at 169.
79 Id. at 254. See Appendix A, infra notes 564-565 and accompanying text. See also Weil, Can a Citizen be Sovereign?, supra note 69, at 1, 6-7; Weil, The Sovereign Citizen, supra note 68 at 173-76.
80 Afroyim, 387 U.S. at 266.
81 Id. at 268.
C. Protection Against the Forcible Destruction of Citizenship

Weil describes the protection of citizenship to be among the “landmark achievements of the second half of the twentieth century.” Given the importance of citizenship for all other rights, Warren’s work to protect U.S. citizenship can only be applauded.

But it did have one presumably inadvertent result, to ensnare millions of overseas Americans into the U.S. extraterritorial tax system – persons who previously would not have been subject to U.S. taxation on their worldwide income.

As discussed above, at the time Cook was decided in 1924, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system was relatively benign. At the time Afroyim was decided in 1967, this was still the case for the most part. The Revenue Act of 1962 had introduced some penalizing provisions, but those provisions pale in comparison to what was to come from 1970 onwards.

Today the U.S. extraterritorial tax system is so penalizing for overseas Americans it causes many to renounce U.S. citizenship. They renounce not because they no longer want to be U.S. citizens but because the U.S. extraterritorial tax system prevents them from living normal lives – as tax residents of other countries – in the places where they live. When they renounce, they do not celebrate. To the contrary, they feel “angry,” “sad,” “torn up,” “grief,” “sick in my stomach,” “heavy heart,” “devastated,” “fraught,” and “holding back tears.” One “burst into tears,” and another vomited.

Appendix A includes a timeline detailing the initial contraction and then expansion of U.S. citizenship from 1855 to the present day. This timeline appears alongside the timeline detailing U.S. extraterritorial tax and banking policies, demonstrating how the expansion of both those policies and of citizenship occurred in parallel.

As seen in Tables 3 and 4, beginning in 2013-14, the period when most intergovernmental agreements (IGAs) implementing FATCA were signed, the number of Americans renouncing U.S. citizenship rose to levels exceeding those of 1945 to 1967 – levels greater than those which prompted Chief Justice Warren’s crusade to save U.S. citizenship. An average of 4,249 Americans per year renounced U.S. citizenship.

---

82 Weil, Can a Citizen be Sovereign?, supra note 69, at 2.
83 Supra notes 16-38, 51-60 and accompanying text.
84 See Appendix A, infra notes 566-638 and accompanying text.
85 Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3, at 312.
86 Infra notes 515-638 and accompanying text, middle column “Citizenship.”
87 Supra note 61 and accompanying text.
88 See infra Table 3.
89 See infra Table 4.
from 2013 to 2020. This compares to an average of 722 per year who renounced from 1996 to 2012.

Table 3: Forced Expatriations Per Year, 1945 to 1977

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Number of Forced Expatriations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1945</td>
<td>1113</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946</td>
<td>1096</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947</td>
<td>1086</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td>1076</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1949</td>
<td>1068</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>1070</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>1078</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>1090</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>1098</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>1106</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1955</td>
<td>1114</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1956</td>
<td>1126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1957</td>
<td>1138</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1958</td>
<td>1150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>1162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1960</td>
<td>1174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1961</td>
<td>1186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>1198</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1963</td>
<td>1210</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td>1222</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>1234</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>1246</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>1258</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1968</td>
<td>1270</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1969</td>
<td>1282</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>1294</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1971</td>
<td>1306</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1972</td>
<td>1318</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1973</td>
<td>1330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>1342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>1354</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1976</td>
<td>1366</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1977</td>
<td>1378</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The consular officers who conduct renunciation procedures at U.S. consulates sometimes inquire about reason(s) for renouncing. Many renunciants fear offering a truthful response because of the “Reed Amendment.” Adopted in 1996 as an amendment to the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, it seeks to bar the entry into the United States of former U.S. citizens who are determined have renounced for the “purpose of avoiding taxation by the United States.” While few Americans renounce U.S. citizenship to avoid paying U.S. taxes, they do renounce because U.S. taxation and banking policies prevent them from living normal lives. Renunciants fear that if, in explaining their reasons for renunciation, they mention the word “tax,” let alone be entirely candid with the consular officer, they may not be able to enter the United States where they have remaining family connections.

---

Most U.S. states recognize the doctrines of constructive dismissal (or constructive discharge) and constructive eviction. The former occurs when an employer makes working conditions so intolerable the employee has no choice but to resign. The latter occurs when a landlord causes a disturbance to a tenant that precludes the tenant from enjoying the benefits of the premises or renders the premises unsuitable for the purpose for which it was leased, leaving the tenant with no choice but to 92 See Appendix A, infra note 608 and accompanying text.

---

93 8 U.S.C. § 1182(a)(10)(E); see Appendix A, infra note 608 and accompanying text.
94 Most do not owe any U.S. tax. For an explanation of why this is the case, see Laura Snyder et al., Mission Impossible: Extraterritorial Taxation and the IRS, 170 TAX NOTES FED. 1827, 1832 n.14 (Mar. 22, 2021). See also Organ, infra note 472, at 4 (observing that most overseas Americans who renounce U.S. citizenship “had no or little tax liability in the years prior to expatriation”); Laura Snyder, Extraterritorial Taxation #12: It’s Not About Paying Taxes, SEAT Working Paper Series #2023/12 (June 5, 2023), https://ssrn.com/abstract=4466128. vacate. In neither case is it required that the employer or landlord act with the specific intent of causing the employee to resign or the tenant to vacate; they need only to have acted in the manner that resulted in the inhospitable conditions. In each case, the actions of the employer or landlord could be characterized as the "forcible destruction" of the employment or tenancy.

The situation of overseas Americans is directly analogous. The dramatic increase in the number of persons renouncing U.S. citizenship since 2013 is not inexplicable. To the contrary, it clearly tracks the implementation of FATCA. That is, despite the Supreme Court’s holding in Afroyim that Congress may not do anything to “abridge or affect” citizenship conferred by the Fourteenth Amendment, Congress is again, through a tax code that makes it difficult for overseas Americans to survive, abridging and affecting U.S. citizenship.

From 2013 to 2020, the average number of renunciants per year (4,249) exceeded those from 1945 to 1967 (4,096), when Congressional policies also caused the “forcible destruction” of U.S. citizenship. Today, U.S. taxation and banking policies make U.S. citizenship intolerable for many Americans, leaving them with no choice but to renounce. They do so not because they want to—the process makes them “burst

---

100 See sources cited supra, note 99.

102 Afroyim, 387 U.S. at 266.

103 The United States – or at least its Executive Branch – acknowledges this situation. See supra notes 469-472 and accompanying text. See also, e.g., Kathleen Peddicord, Does Renouncing U.S. Citizenship Make Sense For The Average American Abroad?, FORBES (July 28, 2022, 11:19 AM), https://www.forbes.com/sites/kathleenpeddicord/2022/07/28/dos-renouncing-us-citizenship-make-sense-for-the-average-american-abroad/?sh=58694d5123ca (stating, “[s] tax laws become more onerous and the IRS’s global reach strengthens, could renunciation come to make sense for the everyday American expat?”).

104 Supra notes 85-91 and accompanying text.

105 Supra note 68 and accompanying text.
into tears” and vomit—

—but because, like those who are constructively dismissed or evicted, they have no choice. U.S. taxation and banking policies are causing the forcible destruction of U.S. citizenship. This occurs in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, which, Afroyim holds, prevents Congress from adopting laws or engaging in practices that result in the forcible destruction of U.S. citizenship. The teaching of Afroyim is that citizenship belongs to the individual and not to the government.

III. Expansion of Equal Protection

At the time Cook was decided, Plessy v. Ferguson was the law of the land. In Plessy, the Court held that racial segregation on railroad cars was permissible under the now infamous and thoroughly discredited “separate but equal” doctrine. The rationale adopted by the Court in Plessy is what has been described as the “prototype” of the traditional deferential rational basis review that is still applied today, depending upon the context.

In Plessy, Louisiana state law required railroad companies to provide “equal but separate accommodations for the white, and colored races,” and required the railroad companies to enforce the segregation. When the law was challenged by a man described as “seven eighths Caucasian and one eighth African blood,” claiming a seat in the car reserved for whites, the Court interpreted the scope of the equal protection clause narrowly; the Court stated that while the object of the Fourteenth Amendment was “undoubtedly” to enforce racial equality “before the law,” it “could not have been intended” to abolish distinctions based upon color or to enforce social (as opposed to political) equality.

---

106 Supra, note 85 and accompanying text.
107 One survey participant stated: “I would love to keep my citizenship with the U.S., but that is out of the question the way things are now.” SEAT Survey – Participant Comments, supra note 95, at 499. Another stated: “If there are no positive changes in the near future, I will renounce. I cannot stay in an abusive relationship. And it is all related to taxation because I love(d) my country and have always supported the U.S. It just can’t go on.” Id. at 505. See also Rachel Heller, The Irony of Renouncing Under Duress, RACHEL’S RUMINATIONS (Nov. 2015), https://rachelsruminations.com/renouncing-under-duress/; and infra notes 465-468 and accompanying text.
111 Plessy, 163 U.S. at 540.
112 Id. at 538.
113 Id. at 544.
the Court, racial segregation of this kind was within the competency of the legislature in the exercise of its police power. The only limits upon this power were that the laws be enacted “in good faith for the promotion for the public good, and not for the annoyance or oppression of a particular class.”114

Plessy has been roundly condemned as an expression of a “morally bankrupt philosophy.”115 It should not be permissible “in our democracy for a dominant group to harness the public laws toward the end of controlling the circumstances of a subordinate group.”116 It has also been condemned as a failure of the judicial process: the failure to develop a legal test that would require the Court to look beyond what seemed familiar and reasonable in order to engage in a critical analysis of whether the law in question violated the principal tenet of the equal protection clause.117

Plessy’s failure was the instigation for the Court to develop some means of discerning, on the one hand, those legislative acts that needed only to pass the same “reasonableness” test applied in Plessy from, on the other hand, those legislative acts requiring greater judicial enquiry.

The Court’s first step on that path came in 1938 – fourteen years after Cook – with United States v. Carolene Products Company.118 Carolene’s now famous Footnote Four introduced the principle of levels of scrutiny, including strict scrutiny, to be applied by a court when considering the constitutionality of a law. Footnote Four established the need for increased scrutiny of laws that affect certain groups, notably groups subject to prejudice as “discreet and insular minorities,” rendering them politically powerless.119

After Carolene and for much of the remainder of the twentieth century, the Court was confronted with a large variety of situations testing the parameters of the Equal Protection Clause. These situations enabled the Court to develop the principles it had set out in Footnote Four into a loosely defined doctrine based upon suspect classification analysis and associated tiers of scrutiny.

It is beyond the scope of this paper to provide an exhaustive discussion of the Court’s doctrine.120 Hornbook descriptions explain that equal

114 Id. at 550.
115 Pollvogt, supra note 110, at 750.
116 Id.
117 Id.
119 Id. at 152 n.4.
120 For more complete reviews as well as critiques, see, e.g., Pollvogt, supra note 110;
Marcy Strauss, Reevaluating Suspect Classifications, 35 Seattle U. L. Rev. 135 (2011); protection challenges to government regulation are subject to one of three tiers of scrutiny: strict, intermediate, or minimal (or “rational basis”). The doctrine calls for the application of strict scrutiny to laws that discriminate based on race or nationality/country of origin or that discriminate with regard to a fundamental right. Laws subject to strict scrutiny are valid only if they are necessary to achieve a compelling governmental interest. Laws discriminating based on gender are subject to intermediate scrutiny; they are constitutional only if they are substantially related to an important state interest. Save for certain exceptions, most other laws are considered consistent with the Equal Protection Clause provided they are rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest.

This Part will focus on those elements of the doctrine – again, the document developed in the decades after Cook – that are the most relevant to the U.S. extraterritorial tax system. Those elements include: (A) inherent suspicion of distinctions based upon country of origin; (B) law cannot create a second class of citizens; (C) animus is per se a constitutional wrong; and (D) a law must rationally relate to a legitimate governmental interest. The last section (E) offers an alternative perspective on how to understand the U.S. extraterritorial tax system in the context of the Fourteenth Amendment.

A. Distinctions Based Upon Country of Origin Are Inherently Suspect

As stated above, laws that discriminate based on race or country of origin are subject to strict scrutiny. This – the highest level of scrutiny – dictates that such laws are valid only if they are necessary to a compel-ing governmental interest. This level of scrutiny is so high that once a court decides it is applicable to the law in question, it is highly likely that the law will be found unconstitutional.

Since Cook, throughout the twentieth century, and into this century, the Court has on multiple occasions denounced laws classifying persons based upon country of origin or nationality. The decisions include:

121 See, e.g., Suzanna Sherry, Selective Judicial Activism: Defending Carolene Products, 122 Id.
123 Id.
124 Id.
125 Id.
126 Supra text accompanying notes 119-125.
127 Interestingly, some members of Congress have vociferously denounced the tax laws of other countries on the grounds that they discriminate against Americans, whether in their practice or by their terms. They have also threatened retaliatory actions. But their denunciations and threats are hypocritical given their silence and inaction in relation to the nationality-based U.S. extraterritorial tax system. Not only does the system also discriminate against Americans Hirabayashi v. United States (1943):128 The Court upheld a wartime curfew for people of Japanese ancestry, arguing that it was necessary considering “the danger of espionage and sabotage, in time of war and of threatened invasion.”129 In another period, the Court, however, explained, such laws would likely have been struck down because distinctions “solely because of [. . .] ancestry are, by their very nature, odious to a free people whose institutions are founded upon the doctrine of equality.”130

Oyama v. California (1948):131 The Court struck down a statute presuming that transfers of real property from persons ineligible for citizenship because of their nationality (in this case, Japanese) to their U.S. citizen children were attempts to circumvent the state’s Alien Land Law rather than legitimate gifts.132 The Court stated that a state may not discriminate based on a parent’s country of origin absent “compelling justification.”133

Hernandez v. Texas (1954):134 The Court held that “the exclusion of otherwise eligible persons from jury service solely because of their ancestry or national origin is discrimination prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment.”135 The Court also observed that “community prejudices are not static, and, from time to time, other differences from the community norm may define other groups which need the same protection”.136

Graham v. Richardson (1971):137 The Court struck down an Arizona requirement that welfare recipients be either U.S. citizens or aliens who have lived in the country for at least 15 years.138 In doing so, the Court compared classifications based on alienage to those based upon nationality and race, declaring that all such classifications are inherently suspect and subject to close judicial scrutiny.139 but – unlike the laws of other countries – it is within the direct power of Congress to change it. See generally Laura Snyder, Discriminatory Taxes and Congress: Do as I Say, Not as I Do, 180 TAX NOTES FED. 1283 (Aug. 21, 2023). See also infra notes 155-164 and accompanying text.

129 Id. at 100.
130 Id.
132 Id.; see Klarman, supra note 120, at 233.
133 Oyama, 332 U.S. at 640.
135 Id. at 479.
136 Id. at 478; See Pollovolt, Beyond, supra note 110 at 756 (describing Hernandez as recognizing the “concept of social group discrimination outside of/in addition to the familiar race discrimination paradigm, and articulat[ing] a surprisingly clear alternative vision of equal protection analysis—complete with a coherent evidentiary rule”).
138 Id.
139 Id. at 371-72.
In re Griffiths (1973): The Court confirmed Graham v. Richardson in a case striking down Connecticut’s exclusion of aliens from the practice of law. The Court repeated that “classifications based on alienage, like those based on nationality or race, are inherently suspect and subject to close judicial scrutiny.”

Frontiero v. Richardson (1973): The Court struck down a policy of the U.S. military automatically (without proof) allowing servicemen to claim their spouses as dependents for the purposes of obtaining benefits but requiring servicewomen to demonstrate proof of their spouses’ dependence. The Court agreed with the plaintiff that classifications based upon sex, like classifications based upon national origin, are inherently suspect and must be subjected to “close” judicial scrutiny. The Court also stated that national origin is an “immutable characteristic determined solely by the accident of birth.”

City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center (1985): The Court declined to hold cognitive disability a quasi-suspect classification calling for a higher standard of judicial review. In doing so, the Court repeated that statutes classifying persons based on national origin (as well as alienage or race) are subject to strict scrutiny. The Court explained:

> These factors [national origin, alienage, or race] are so seldom relevant to the achievement of any legitimate state interest that laws grounded in such considerations are deemed to reflect prejudice and antipathy — a view that those in the burdened class are not as worthy or deserving as others. For these reasons, and because such discrimination is unlikely to be soon rectified by legislative means, these laws are subjected to strict scrutiny, and will be sustained only if they are suitably tailored to serve a compelling state interest.

Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard (2023): The Court held that race-based admissions policies at two U.S. universities violated the 141 Id. at 721.

---

143 Id.
144 Id. at 682.
145 Id. at 686.
147 Id.
148 Id. at 440. The clause typically used in this context is “narrowly tailored.” See Luiz Antonio Salazar Arroyo, Tailoring the Narrow Tailoring Requirement in the Supreme Court’s Affirmative Action Cases, 58 CLEV. ST. L. REV. 649, 653-56 (2010).
149 Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard, No. 20–1199 (U.S. 2023) (slip op.).
Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In explaining that the policies were inherently suspect and subject to strict scrutiny, the majority as well as two concurring opinions made clear that race and nationality are inextricably linked. “Antipathy” towards distinctions based on race/nationality, the Court further explained, is “deeply rooted in our Nation’s constitutional and demographic history.”

These decisions leave no doubt that any law, regulation or other governmental action or policy drawing distinctions based upon country of origin or nationality are subject to strict scrutiny. As such, they will be found to violate the Fourteenth Amendment’s Equal Protection Clause absent a showing on the part of the government that they are necessary and narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest.

Section 1 of the Internal Revenue Code imposes U.S. federal taxation upon every “individual,” without drawing any distinctions regarding residence, nationality, or other factors. This ambiguous language arguably subjects every person in the world, regardless of residence – or any other connection to the United States – to the U.S. tax system. Thus, it is no surprise that the first thing the first Treasury Regulation does is to draw distinctions. Treasury Regulation § 1.1-1(a)(1) classifies “individuals” into three groups. The first group is based upon U.S. residence; it includes all residents of the United States, regardless of citizenship and even regardless of legal status as a resident.\textsuperscript{157} The remaining two groups are based upon non-U.S. residence combined with nationality. More specifically, one group consists of persons who are non-residents of the United States but who are U.S. citizens;\textsuperscript{158} the other group consists of persons who, while also non-residents of the United States, are not U.S. citizens (they are referred to as nonresident aliens, or “NRAs”).\textsuperscript{159}

Based upon a cursory analysis of Treasury Regulation § 1.1-1(a)(1),\textsuperscript{160} it might be argued that the classification of “citizen” includes all U.S. citizens, including those who live in the United States. Indeed, that is how the classification is presented in § 1.1-1(b).\textsuperscript{161} But the reality is that in the specific context of federal taxation, the reference to “citizen” has consequence only with respect to persons living outside the United States. Given all U.S. residents are subject to U.S. federal taxation without limit, regardless of their citizenship status,\textsuperscript{162} the only persons who can be concerned by the reference to “citizens” are persons living outside the United States. Treasury Regulation § 1.1-1 unmistakably classifies those persons based on their country of origin: among all persons living outside the United States, U.S. tax rules subject those whose country of origin is the United States to far more onerous federal tax burdens as compared to those whose country of origin is not the United States. Stated another way, if the reference to “citizens” were removed from Treasury Regulation § 1.1-1,\textsuperscript{163} it would have great consequence for U.S. citizens living outside the United States while it would have no consequence for anyone – U.S. citizen or not – residing in the United States, nor for those living outside the United States who are not citizens.\textsuperscript{164} Understood in this manner, it is clear that the classification of “citizens” as it is contained in federal tax rules constitutes a suspect classification based upon country of origin (or nationality) and, as such, it is subject to strict scrutiny by a court.

Because the classification is subject to strict scrutiny, if it were challenged before a court, the government would have the burden of demonstrating that the classification is narrowly tailored to serve a compelling governmental interest. This requires a two-part analysis: (i) is there a

\begin{itemize}
\item\textsuperscript{157} Treas. Reg. § 1.1-1(a)(1).
\item\textsuperscript{158} Id.
\item\textsuperscript{159} Id.
\item\textsuperscript{160} Id.
\item\textsuperscript{161} Treas. Reg. § 1.1-1(b).
\item\textsuperscript{162} See Francine J. Lipman, The “ILLEGAL” Tax, 11 CONN. PUB. INT. L. J. 93 (2012) (explaining the punitive manner by which undocumented immigrants are taxed in the United States, including federal income tax). Id. at 99-102.
\item\textsuperscript{163} And other relevant sections of the Internal Revenue Code and Treasury Regulations.
\item\textsuperscript{164} Other than enabling them to live freely outside the United States should they seek to do so.
\end{itemize} compelling governmental interest; and (ii) if so, is the classification narrowly tailored to serve that interest?

1. Compelling Governmental Interest?

Several rationales have been offered to justify the worldwide taxation of overseas Americans. The rationales include allegiance to the United States, benefits received as a U.S. citizen, membership in U.S. society, it is “worth the tax cost,” and “administrability.” Regardless of the merit of any of these rationales, they should not be confused with what might constitute a compelling governmental interest. To the contrary, except perhaps for “administrability,” each of those rationales were conceived from the perspective of overseas Americans – the rationales are intended to explain why it is appropriate for the United States to tax the worldwide income of overseas Americans. For the purposes of strict scrutiny, the question must be asked from the perspective of the government: what is its compelling interest in the classification?

The U.S. tax system is a comprehensive regulatory regime that must meet constitutional standards. In this context, most would agree that the federal government has an interest in taxation. At the same time, however, few would agree that the federal government has a compelling interest in taxation regardless of the conditions. Few would agree that the federal government has a compelling interest in taxing whomever it 166 This is the rationale offered by the Court in Cook: there is a “presumption that government, by its very nature, benefits the citizen and his property wherever found, and, therefore, has the power to make the benefit complete.” 265 U.S. at 56. Nielsen echoes this position, stating: “American citizens abroad do receive some benefits from their citizenship which [justifies] the U.S.’s exercise of taxing jurisdiction.” Grace Nielsen, Resolving the Conflicts of Citizenship Taxation: Two Proposals, 25 FLA. TAX REV. 436, 456 (2021). See Snyder, Rationalized, supra note 165 at 546-64.

167 See generally Snyder, Rationalized, supra note 165, explaining why none of the rationales have merit.

169 See generally Zelinsky, supra note 165. See also Snyder, Rationalized, supra note 165 at 575-77.

170 See generally Snyder, Rationalized, supra note 165, explaining why none of the rationales have merit.
chooses, whenever it chooses, however it chooses, and in any amount it chooses, without any restraint. For example, presumably everyone would object to federal tax enforcement agents forcibly entering homes to confiscate cash or items of value, if the agents’ only basis for doing so was to raise revenue. This demonstrates that for even the most ardent supporters of taxation, there are – or, at least, there should be – limits on the federal power to tax, and that they include constitutional limits (in this case, Fourth Amendment protections against unreasonable search and seizure).171

From the perspective of the government, the explanation commonly offered for taxation is the need for the government to raise revenue to fund government expenditures.172 However, Modern Monetary Theory (MMT) teaches that while this explanation may be true for state and local governments who do not have their own sovereign currency, it is not true of the U.S. federal government.173 Not only can the federal government create its own currency, but it must do so. If the federal government did not create currency and then spend it into the economy, there would be no medium of exchange in the country (other than foreign currencies), nor any currency in the economy to tax back.174 When a tax is paid, the money is removed from circulation and effectively destroyed.175

Given, as MMT teaches, the purpose of federal taxation is not to raise revenue, what is its purpose? As long ago as 1946, Beardsley Ruml, a Director of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, offered a useful framework. He explained that taxation serves the following important purposes:

173 U.S. CONST. amend IV.
174 See generally Stephanie Kelton, The Deficit Myth: Modern Monetary Theory and the Birth of the People’s Economy (2020); see also Andrew Baker & Richard Murphy, Modern Monetary Theory and the Changing Role of Tax in Society, 19 SOC. Pol’y & Soc’y 454, 457 (2020). In addition, when a government accepts its own currency in the settlement of tax, it creates demand for the currency. Further, the requirement that tax be paid using this currency usually requires that the currency in question be used as a medium for exchange within the economy. Id.; see also Stephanie Kelton, How We Think About the Deficit Is Mostly Wrong, N.Y. TIMES (Oct. 5, 2017), https://www.nytimes.com/2017/10/05/opinion/deficit-tax-cuts-trump.html.
• Issuing currency without taxing any back would lead to inflation. Taxation allows the government to remove money from the economy to limit inflation.

• Gross levels of inequality are considered by many to threaten democracy as well as economic and social development. Taxation allows the government to affect a redistribution of income to alleviate inequality.

• Governments often seek to encourage or discourage specific behaviors. Taxation can be used for this purpose. Examples include, on one hand, taxes to discourage pollution, smoking, or Wall Street speculation, and, on the other hand, incentives to encourage the use of electric vehicles or engaging in higher education or training.

• It can be useful for governments to isolate or establish a line item to keep track of specific programs, such as Social Security or the Highway Trust Fund.

This list offers a useful framework for determining what, if any, compelling interest the United States may have in taxing overseas citizens.

To begin, any mention of citizenship as a legitimate purpose for taxation is conspicuously absent. To the contrary, this framework is predicated upon the assumption that the taxpayers in question reside in the country in question, regardless of citizenship, or, at a minimum, that it applies to activity taking place within and not outside the country in question.

Further, it would be nonsensical to suggest that the United States government has a compelling interest in taxing for the purpose of limiting inflation, reducing inequality, or encouraging or discouraging behaviors for countries other than the United States. And if it were to do so, it would be a gross violation of the sovereignty of those other countries, as it would be if another country attempted to do the same for the United States.

Taxing persons outside the United States has little effect on inflation in the United States, especially to the extent that those persons earn and spend outside the United States and in currencies other than the U.S. dollar. (On the other hand, when an overseas American pays income tax to the United States based on income originating from the American’s country of residence, it has multiple negative repercussions for that country, as explained below.178

---

This leaves the purpose of incentivizing or disincentivizing specific behaviors. Most would agree that, if this is to be the purpose for any given tax, it should seek to encourage behaviors that are beneficial to society (not behaviors that detract from society) or to discourage behaviors that are detrimental to society or, more generally, that are wrong or abhorrent. At a bare minimum, taxation should not be used to discourage behaviors that are protected as either constitutional or human rights. As discussed in detail below,179 leaving one’s country is a human right protected by multiple human rights instruments that the United States has both signed and ratified. Understood in this manner, the United States has no compelling governmental interest in using taxation (or any other means) either to discourage Americans from living outside the United States or to discourage them from engaging in economic activity (such as purchasing a home, investing, saving for retirement, or operating a business) in the countries where they live.

If the teachings of MMT were set aside and it was accepted that a purpose of federal taxation was to raise revenue, this would still not constitute a compelling reason. To begin, it would be excessively broad: if that were all that was required to justify federal taxation then the United States could, without limit, tax all persons in the world based upon their worldwide income, regardless of their citizenship or any other status. Further, the United States collects little revenue from overseas Americans; amounts collected from persons filing a tax return from outside the United States represent just 0.51% of total federal income tax revenue and just 0.19% of total federal government spending.180

Not only does the United States not have any compelling reason for taxing persons living outside the United States based upon their worldwide income, it also has at least two compelling reasons why it should not, as discussed immediately below.

a. The U.S. Extraterritorial Tax System Threatens the Sovereignty of Other Countries and Violates Their Right to Self-Determination

When the United States imposes its extraterritorial tax system upon persons residing in other countries, the system operates to nullify those

---

178 Infra notes 181, 478-485 and accompanying text.
179 Infra notes 412-429 and accompanying text.
180 Snyder et al., Buy Their Freedom, supra note 176, at 234.
countries’ own policies. Americans living in other countries have considerable difficulties, as examples: owning their own homes, investing, saving for retirement, and fully utilizing welfare benefits in accordance with the policies adopted by the countries where they live. As a result, overseas Americans are not able to integrate into their communities in the manner policymakers in those countries intended and, upon retirement, they are more likely to become public charges.181

In addition, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates many countries’ data protection,182 human rights,183 banking,184 and succession planning policies,185 rendering those policies ineffectual for a portion of the population of the countries where they were adopted. Further, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system imposes on economic activity outside the United States a tax that is different from that imposed by the country where the activity took place, violating that country’s tax policies.186 And when an overseas American pays tax to the United States based upon that economic activity, the results in the American’s country of residence are: (i) a reduction of the money in circulation for the purchase of goods and services,187 (ii) a reduction in the tax base, and (iii) an increase in the risk of deflation.188 These results occur outside of the control of that country’s monetary authorities. All these consequences of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system threaten the sovereignty and violate the right to self-determination of the countries where overseas Americans live.189

b. The United States is Unable to Administer its Extraterritorial Tax System

U.S. tax rules require the IRS to administer three tax systems, all in accordance with the Taxpayer Bill of Rights: (i) a domestic system for U.S. residents, (ii) a system based upon source for nonresident aliens, and (iii) an extraterritorial system based upon U.S. nationality. The IRS has made clear that it is unable or unwilling to administer the extraterritorial system.190

This is demonstrated in a multitude of ways. Just a few examples include (1) the failure to train IRS agents regarding the unique issues

181 See infra notes 477-485 and accompanying text.
182 See Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3, at 328-30.
183 Id. at 333-34.
184 Id. at 331-33.
185 Id. at 338-41.
186 Id. at 341-44.
187 While this is generally undesirable for any country, it is especially undesirable for countries in the euro-zone, as these countries do not control their own money supply.
188 See Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3, at 341-44.
189 Id. at 344; infra notes 477-485 and accompanying text.
190 See generally Snyder et al., Mission Impossible, supra note 94.
faced by overseas Americans; (2) the refusal to establish adequate channels of communication with overseas Americans, whether by phone, postal mail, or electronic means; (3) the refusal to communicate with non-English-speaking overseas Americans in the languages they understand; (4) the failure to adopt adequate means to either receive payments from or effect payment to overseas Americans; and (5) the highly discriminatory treatment of overseas Americans (compared with U.S. residents) regarding access to in-person assistance and low-income taxpayer clinics.\footnote{Id. at 1829-30. See also infra notes 497-499 and accompanying text.}

The Taxpayer Advocacy Panel (TAP), a federal advisory committee to the IRS, has recommended that the IRS address many of these issues.\footnote{See generally Snyder et al., Mission Impossible, supra note 94.} In almost every case, the IRS has refused to do so. Its refusals nearly always cite budgetary concerns, stating, as examples, that the implementation of the recommendation “would increase the overall cost” or is “unfeasible” given the resources required.\footnote{Id. at 1834, 1835, 1839.} These responses are an admission that the IRS has neither the resources nor the expertise to effectively administer a tax system for overseas Americans whose existence —economically, and in many cases linguistically —is “foreign” to the United States.

As detailed above\footnote{Supra note 191 and accompanying text.} and elsewhere,\footnote{See generally Snyder et al., Mission Impossible, supra note 94.} there are multiple, complex capacities that the IRS would need to develop to adequately, let alone fairly, administer the United States’ system of extraterritorial taxation and in compliance with the Taxpayer Bill of Rights.\footnote{See infra notes 497-499 and accompanying text.}

Setting aside the extent to which the development of these capacities is humanly possible — it is unclear that it is — it would require enormous resources. Even when given the opportunity, the IRS does not request the needed resources\footnote{I.R.S., IR-2021-07, TAXPAYER FIRST ACT REP. TO CONG. (Jan. 2021). The IRS had the opportunity to request the needed resources in this 2021 report to Congress, but failed to do so. See Snyder et al, Mission Impossible, supra note 94, at 1843-53.} and Congress has given no indication it would grant them if they were requested. The fact that the United States does not even aspire to administering its extraterritorial system in any manner that is adequate, let alone fair and in compliance with the Taxpayer Bill of Rights, is a compelling reason to end the system.

When the media raises the question of the U.S extraterritorial tax system, it does so principally in a discussion about wealthy persons moving their residence outside the United States, or renouncing U.S. citizenship, reportedly with the principal purpose of reducing if not eliminating their U.S. tax burdens.\(^{198}\) These persons are implicitly (if not explicitly) portrayed as having taken advantage of the United States – its regulatory environment and its resources – to build their fortunes, only to leave the country to avoid paying taxes on those fortunes.

All persons have human rights, including the wealthy. The United States cannot have a compelling governmental interest in measures that prevent or discourage any American – including those who are wealthy – from exercising their human right to leave the United States. How the U.S. extraterritorial tax system makes it difficult for Americans of all income levels to leave the United States is discussed in further detail below.\(^{199}\)

This does not mean that the United States would not have a compelling governmental interest in taxing such persons’ U.S.-sourced income, as well as – at least arguably – the gains in the value of their assets while they were U.S residents.

But the reach of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system is far more extensive than those limited purposes, as seen immediately below.

2. Narrowly Tailored Classification?

As mentioned immediately above, media is replete with articles perpetuating the illusion that Americans who leave the United States to reside in another country and/or who renounce U.S. citizenship are wealthy, and their principal purpose is to avoid U.S. taxation. These articles cause considerable harm to overseas Americans because they propagate the stereotype that they are rich, unpatriotic, lazy, tax dodgers.\(^{200}\) The reality is that for every Eric Schmidt (former Google CEO)\(^{201}\) or Eduardo Saverin (Facebook co-founder)\(^{202}\) who seek to move to a tax haven to reduce their U.S tax burden, there are hundreds of thousands of ordinary Americans who seek to live ordinary lives in ordinary countries that impose ordinary taxes. They live outside the United States not to \(^{199}\) See infra notes 412-429 and accompanying text (discussing the human right to leave one’s country).

---

avoid taxation (they live in countries with ordinary tax systems), but to pursue professional opportunities, to be with a romantic partner, to fulfill family obligations, or simply for adventure.203 Many left the United States as children, with their families, or as young adults.204 Many have lived outside the United States for decades.205 And some were born outside the United States and have never lived there206 — they are U.S. citizens by virtue of the U.S. citizenship of a parent. Most overseas Americans are low or middle-income and have limited savings, if any.207 Those who have achieved financial success did so outside the United States, using resources outside the United States. When some of these ordinary persons take the drastic step of renouncing U.S. citizenship, they do so not to “avoid paying U.S. taxes” (most owe no U.S. tax)208 but because for them the limitations the U.S. extraterritorial tax system places upon their lives are no longer tenable.209

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system makes it impossible for ordinary Americans to live ordinary lives in countries with ordinary tax systems (not tax havens) because they can engage in most ordinary economic activities only with considerable difficulty.210 And of those who seek to live an ordinary life by renouncing U.S. citizenship, many face a penalizing exit tax calculated based on all their assets, not just those acquired using U.S. resources.211

At the same time, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system is ineffective in preventing the kind of abuses that the media so often highlights. Only exceptionally wealthy persons, not ordinary ones, have the resources to purchase citizenships and establish residencies in tax havens.212 Indeed, not only does the U.S. tax system fail to prevent this kind of abuse, but it

---

204 Id. at 11 (indicating that 70% of survey participants –Americans living overseas– left the United States before age 36).
205 Id. (indicating that 44% of the survey participants were living outside the United States for more than two decades).
206 Id. at 9.
207 Id. at 7-8.
208 See supra note 94.
209 See supra notes 103-107, and infra notes 465-468, and accompanying text.
211 See infra notes 329-357 and accompanying text.
facilitates it by offering favorable tax conditions to Americans with the resources to establish residence in a U.S. territory such as Puerto Rico\(^\text{213}\) or the U.S. Virgin Islands.\(^\text{214}\)

3. Summary

In sum, the classification of “citizens” as it is contained in federal tax rules constitutes a suspect classification based upon country of origin (or nationality) and, as such, it is subject to strict scrutiny by a court. The United States has no compelling interest in taxing the non-U.S. income of persons living overseas whose country of origin is the United States. While the United States has an interest in preventing tax abuses by wealthy persons whose fortunes were built using U.S. resources, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system’s classification of overseas persons based upon country of origin is not narrowly tailored to serve that interest. The prevention of tax abuses by wealthy citizens can be achieved through a system of residence-based taxation and the implementation of a departure (rather than exit) tax.\(^\text{215}\)

B. Law Cannot Create a Second Class of Citizens

Schneider v. Rusk (1964)\(^\text{216}\) involved a woman who moved from Germany to the United States as a child and became a naturalized U.S. citizen along with her parents, and who, as an adult, moved back to Germany.\(^\text{217}\) After living overseas for several years, she applied for a U.S. Citizenship For Tax Havens to Crypto Investors, Yahoo! (July 12, 2021), https://www.yahoo.com/video/plan-b-passport-selling-citizenship-164123964.html.

\(^{215}\) See infra notes 357, 507-512 and accompanying text.

\(^{216}\) Schneider v. Rusk, 377 U.S. 163 (1964). See supra notes 75-77. See also infra Appendix A, note 560 and accompanying text.

\(^{217}\) Schneider, 377 U.S. at 164.
The U.S. Department of State rejected her request, asserting that pursuant to the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 (INA) she had lost her U.S. citizenship because she had returned to live in her country of origin for an extended period. Schneider sued for a declaratory judgement that she was still a U.S. citizen.

The Court commented extensively on the prejudice against naturalized citizens reflected in the INA:

This statute proceeds on the impermissible assumption that naturalized citizens as a class are less reliable, and bear less allegiance to this country than do the native born. This is an assumption that is impossible for us to make. [. . .] A native-born citizen is free to reside abroad indefinitely without suffering loss of citizenship. The discrimination aimed at naturalized citizens drastically limits their rights to live and work abroad in a way that other citizens may.

Ultimately, the Court explained, the relevant clause of the INA created “a second-class citizenship.” This was unacceptable because regardless of whether a citizen was naturalized or native born, living abroad was “no badge of lack of allegiance, and in no way evidences a voluntary renunciation of nationality and allegiance. It may indeed be compelled by family, business, or other legitimate reasons.”

There are important parallels between Schneider and the U.S. extraterritorial tax system. To begin, in both cases the laws in question were motivated by “impermissible assumption” — in other words, by prejudice — held against persons who are U.S. citizens but who have associations considered too close with places outside the United States. In both cases, the persons in question were assumed to hold insufficient allegiance to the United States and to have no legitimate reason to live outside the United States. And the “impermissible assumptions” go one step further than those observed by the Court in Schneider: naturalized or not, Americans living overseas today are assumed to do so for the purpose of avoiding U.S. taxation.

---

218 Id.
219 Id. Section 352(a)(1) of the INA (Pub. L. No. 82-414) provided that naturalized citizens shall lose their U.S. citizenship if they maintain continuous residence in their country of origin for three years. § 352(a)(1), 66 Stat. at 269. See supra note 41 and infra Appendix A, note 545 and accompanying text.
220 Schneider, 377 U.S. at 164.
221 Id. at 168.
222 Id. at 169.
223 Id.
224 Supra note 221 and accompanying text.
In both cases, the result is law so penalizing for a specific class of U.S. citizens that they are relegated to second class citizenship, in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Table 5\textsuperscript{225} catalogs the many ways the U.S. extraterritorial tax system does this with respect to overseas Americans: (1) by penalizing financial and other activities carried out by overseas Americans in their country of residence while allowing U.S. residents to engage in the same kinds of activities in their country of residence without penalty; (2) by reserving most tax credits (such as the Earned Income Tax Credit and the Work Opportunity Tax Credit) to U.S. residents, regardless of citizenship status; (3) by requiring overseas Americans to prepare U.S. tax returns that are considerably more complex than those required of most U.S. residents, subject to draconian penalties in the event of inadvertent error and often requiring professional assistance that is considerably more expensive than that required for a U.S. resident’s tax return; (4) by excluding overseas Americans entirely from certain IRS services and by providing them with significantly reduced levels of other services, as compared to U.S. residents; (5) by requiring overseas Americans to submit a list of the accounts they hold in their country of residence to a “Financial Crimes Enforcement Network”; (6) by requiring financial institutions in other countries to identify “suspected U.S. persons” and report to the IRS detailed information about those persons’ accounts, subject to draconian penalties; and (7) by causing non-governmental actors to deny to overseas Americans banking, mortgages, and other financial services as well investment, employment, community service, and other opportunities in their country of residence.

\textsuperscript{225} \textit{Infra} notes 226-247 and accompanying text.
TABLE 5: OVERSEAS AMERICANS RELEGATED TO SECOND CLASS CITIZENSHIP

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Contained in text of U.S. law/regulation/treaty</th>
<th>Non-Resident Aliens (NRAs)</th>
<th>U.S. Residents (regardless of nationality)</th>
<th>U.S. Nationals Living Outside the United States</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1 Eligible for Earned Income Tax Credit</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X\textsuperscript{226}</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2 Eligible for Work Opportunity Tax Credit</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X\textsuperscript{227}</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3 Eligible for 2021 Advanced Child Tax Credit</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X\textsuperscript{228}</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 Access to in-person IRS services</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X\textsuperscript{229}</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 Eligible for full tax treaty benefits</td>
<td>X</td>
<td>X\textsuperscript{230}</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6 Subject to U.S. taxation based on worldwide income</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X</td>
<td>X</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

\textsuperscript{226} To be eligible for the Earned Income Tax Credit, a taxpayer must meet certain requirements which operate to exclude overseas Americans. Notably, the taxpayer must not claim the Foreign Earned Income Exclusion and, depending on the circumstances, may not use the filing status married filing separately (MFS). I.R.S., Who Qualifies for the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC), https://www.irs.gov/publications/p596#en_US_2020_publink1000298590 (Mar. 14, 2022). Overseas taxpayers use the filing status MSF at a higher rate than domestic taxpayers (17.64% as compared to 2.09%). See infra notes 574, 631.

\textsuperscript{227} Eligibility for the Work Opportunity Tax Credit is structured in a manner that makes it all but impossible for an employer or employee located outside the United States to qualify. For example, the employer’s application for the credit must be certified by a state workforce agency. These do not exist outside the United States. See I.R.S., How to File a WOTC Certification Request, https://www.dol.gov/agencies/eta/wotc/how-to-file (last visited June 24, 2023).

\textsuperscript{228} The 2021 American Rescue Plan expanded the child tax credit, including the implementation of advance payments. However, to qualify at least one of the child’s parents must have lived in the United States for at least half the year. Further, the credit applied only with respect to children who had a valid Social Security Number; many U.S. citizens living overseas do not meet the requirements to pass U.S. citizenship to their children born outside the United States thus those children are ineligible for Social Security Numbers. See I.R.S., Advance Child Tax Credit Payments in 2021, https://www.irs.gov/credits-deductions/advancelchild-tax-credit-payments-in-2021 (May 25, 2022). See also infra notes 636-638.

\textsuperscript{229} See Snyder et al., Mission Impossible, supra note 94, at 1832. See also Appendix A, infra note 624 and accompanying text.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Non-Resident Aliens (NRAs)</th>
<th>U.S. Residents (regardless of nationality)</th>
<th>U.S. Nationals Living Outside the United States</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>7</td>
<td>Penalizing U.S. taxation of retirement savings in country of residence (CoR)*</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Penalizing U.S. taxation of investments and capital gains in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>9</td>
<td>Penalizing U.S. taxation of business operations in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10</td>
<td>Penalizing U.S. taxation of welfare benefits in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>Incur taxable phantom gains based upon currency used in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12</td>
<td>Highly complex U.S. tax return</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>Considerably reduced IRS services</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14</td>
<td>Required to compile two different lists of accounts held in CoR and to submit one list to “Financial Crimes Enforcement Network” and the other list to IRS</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Financial institutions in CoR required to submit to IRS detailed information about accounts held</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<sup>231</sup> Infra note 448 and accompanying text. See also Appendix A, infra notes 557-558, 575, 603 and accompanying text.

<sup>232</sup> Infra note 448 and accompanying text. See also Appendix A, infra notes 591-592, 616, 626 and accompanying text.

<sup>233</sup> Supra note 57; infra note 437 and accompanying text.

<sup>235</sup> Supra note 35; Appendix A, infra note 597.

<sup>237</sup> Infra notes 497-498 and accompanying text.

<sup>238</sup> Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3, at 2285; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3, at 309.

<sup>239</sup> Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3, at 2285; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3, at 308-09.
C. Animus is Per Se a Constitutional Wrong

Department of Agriculture v. Moreno (1973)\(^{248}\) involved a 1971 amendment to the Food Stamp Act of 1964 which withdrew food stamp

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Occur as a consequence of U.S. law/regulation/treaty</th>
<th>Non-Resident Aliens (NRAs)</th>
<th>U.S. Residents (regardless of nationality)</th>
<th>U.S. Nationals Living Outside the United States</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>16 High cost to prepare U.S. tax return</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X(^{240})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17 Inability to open or keep bank/financial accounts in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X(^{241})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18 Barred from certain investments in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X(^{242})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19 Difficulties to obtain mortgage in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X(^{243})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20 Difficulties to hold title to family assets in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X(^{244})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21 Denied certain positions of employment in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X(^{245})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22 Denied certain opportunities for community service in CoR</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X(^{246})</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23 Inability in CoR to hold power of attorney or serve as trustee for a family member or serve as executor of family member’s estate</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>-</td>
<td>X(^{247})</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

\(^{242}\) Id. See also SEAT Survey – Data Part 2 of 2, supra note 95, at 32, 34.

\(^{247}\) Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3 at 2286; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 310; SEAT Survey – Data Part 2 of 2, supra note 95, at 32, 44.

\(^{248}\) Department of Agriculture v. Moreno, 413 U. S. 528 (1973).
benefits if any individual living in a household was unrelated to the other residents.\textsuperscript{249} The Court invalidated the amendment on the grounds that it violated the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause.\textsuperscript{250}

In invalidating the amendment, the Court pointed to the Act’s legislative history which, the Court observed, indicated that the amendment was intended to prevent “hippies” and “hippie communes”\textsuperscript{251} from participating in the food stamp program. For the Court, this evidence alone was reason enough to invalidate the amendment, without the need to consider whether “hippies” or “hippie communes” constituted a protected class.\textsuperscript{252}

The Court explained: “if the constitutional conception of ‘equal protection of the laws’ means anything, it must at the very least mean that a bare congressional desire to harm a politically unpopular group cannot constitute a legitimate governmental interest.”\textsuperscript{253}

Since \textit{Moreno}, the Court has developed a doctrine of animus described as an “independent constitutional force.”\textsuperscript{254} This development occurred in cases such as:

\textit{City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center} (1985),\textsuperscript{255} in which the city of Cleburne, Texas required a special zoning permit for a proposed group home for the cognitively disabled. The Court refused to classify cognitively disabled persons as a suspect class subject to heightened scrutiny.\textsuperscript{256} But the Court nevertheless ruled that the requirement for a special zoning permit violated equal protection rights because “requiring the permit in this case appears to us to rest on an irrational prejudice against the [cognitively disabled].”\textsuperscript{257}

\textit{Romer v. Evans} (1996)\textsuperscript{258} involved Colorado’s constitutional Amendment 2, which sought to void existing anti-discrimination policies in Colorado intended to protect gay men and lesbians at various levels of state government.\textsuperscript{259} Amendment 2 further forbade cities, counties, departments, and the state legislature from passing such protections in the

\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{249} \textit{Id.} at 528.
\item \textsuperscript{250} \textit{Id.} at 528-29. See also Appendix A, infra note 569 and accompanying text.
\item \textsuperscript{251} \textit{Moreno}, 413 U. S. at 534.
\item \textsuperscript{252} \textit{Id.} at 538.
\item \textsuperscript{253} \textit{Id.}
\item \textsuperscript{255} \textit{City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Ctr., Inc.}, 473 U.S. 432 (1985).
\item \textsuperscript{256} \textit{Id.} at 432, 442-47. See also supra note 147 and accompanying text.
\item \textsuperscript{257} \textit{City of Cleburne}, 473 U.S. at 433. See also Appendix A, infra note 588-589 and accompanying text.
\item \textsuperscript{258} Romer v. Evans, 517 U.S. 620 (1996).
\item \textsuperscript{259} \textit{Id.}
\end{itemize} future. In striking down Amendment 2 the Court stated, “the amendment seems inexplicable by anything but animus toward the class it affects.”

United States v. Windsor (2013) involved the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA), which defined “marriage” and “spouse” to exclude same-sex partners for purposes of federal law. The result, in this case, was that the surviving spouse of a same-sex marriage was unable to claim the federal estate tax exemption. The Court held that DOMA violated the equal protection component of the Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause. Citing Moreno, the Court explained that “the avowed purpose and practical effect of [DOMA] are to impose a disadvantage, a separate status, and so a stigma upon all who enter into same-sex marriages.”

The animus doctrine constitutionalizes the basic precept that it is wrong for one person to treat another person malevolently. A purpose to inflict injury or indignity is an impermissible purpose. “This sentiment so suffuses our moral and legal tradition that hardly anyone would deny it.” Even Justice Antonin Scalia would agree. In his dissent in Romer he wrote: “Of course it is our moral heritage that one should not hate any human being or class of human beings.”

It follows from this that scholars have described the animus doctrine as a “silver bullet:” when the Court identifies evidence of animus, other purported governmental interests are necessarily discredited, regardless of whether they appear legitimate on a superficial level. This is appropriate because if animus is, in fact, constitutionally impermissible, no law found to be motivated by animus should be permitted to stand:

Unlike a finding of discriminatory intent, a finding of animus should not trigger further scrutiny; rather, it should end the case, and end it with a defeat for the government. Because animus short-circuits the tiered scru-

---

260 Id.
261 Id. at 632. See Carpenter, supra note 254, at 210, 212. See also Appendix A, infra note 605 and accompanying text.
264 Windsor, 570 U.S. at 744.
265 Id. at 746.
266 Id. at 746. See also Appendix A, infra note 620 and accompanying text.
267 Carpenter, supra note 254, at 243.
268 Id. at 185.
269 517 U.S. at 644.
271 Id. at 930.
tiny analysis, cutting immediately to the ultimate constitutional question about invidiousness, there is simply nothing left for a court to consider once it concludes that a law is grounded in animus.\textsuperscript{272}

The evidence of animus need not be extensive; \textit{Moreno} was decided based on “sparse" legislative history.\textsuperscript{273} Nor need it be explicit; it can be inferred. Evidence of animus can be found in a variety of sources beyond legislative history, such as in the media and in the structure of the law in question.\textsuperscript{274} Further, it is not necessary that the law in question be solely motivated by animus: it suffices that animus “may be lurking” as a motivation.\textsuperscript{275}

The evidence that the U.S. extraterritorial tax system is motivated by animus is both plentiful and unequivocal. From the system’s first inceptions in the nineteenth century until the present-day members of Congress and other policymakers have not hesitated to express their contempt for overseas Americans and their desire to punish them because they live overseas. They have expressed this in legislative history, in the press, and in the titles and terminology of the laws themselves. Examples include:

1. 1860s: The Origins of the Income Tax

The Revenue Acts of 1861 and 1862 limited the taxation of overseas Americans to only specified types of unearned U.S.-source income (earned income, as well as any kind of income sourced outside the United States, were excluded).\textsuperscript{276} The Revenue Act of 1864 changed that by expanding the taxation of overseas Americans to all their income, regardless of type or source.\textsuperscript{277} The legislative history reveals that for Senator Jacob Collamer of Vermont this change was justified not because it served any one or more governmental interests, but because those Americans who “skulk away” to Paris “avoiding the risk of being drafted” should not “get off with as low a tax as anybody else.”\textsuperscript{278}

\textsuperscript{272} William D. Araiza, \textit{Animus and its Discontents}, 71 FLA. L. REV. 155, 188 (2019). Araiza also explains “when the Court has pushed forward in its review of a law even after initially observing its grounding in animus, it should be understood as endeavoring to ensure that, in fact, animus was the reason for the law.” \textit{Id.} at 189.

\textsuperscript{273} \textit{Id.} at 164.

\textsuperscript{274} \textit{Id.} at 179 (citing Pollvogt, \textit{Unconstitutional}, supra note 270, at 926).

\textsuperscript{276} \textit{See} Appendix A, \textit{infra} notes 515-516 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{277} \textit{See} Appendix A, \textit{infra} note 517 and accompanying text.

2. 1890s: The Reinstatement of the Income Tax

When the income tax was reinstated in 1894, it included the taxation of overseas Americans on all forms of their worldwide income. The legislative history reveals that for Senator George Hoar of Massachusetts this was justified again not because it served any one or more governmental interests but because there exists “that class of persons” who go abroad for the “very purpose” of escaping the burdens of citizenship. They live in luxury in a foreign capital and at less cost, but they have “none of the voluntary obligations which rest upon citizens, of charity, or contributions, or supporting churches, or anything of that sort.” Senator Hoar makes clear that the only reason to tax overseas Americans is to punish them for living overseas: “He is the one human being we ought to tax. If there is any good in an income tax that would be the good thing if it did that.”

3. 1990s: The Exit Tax

The 1990s was a time when members of Congress and other policymakers held particular vitriol for overseas Americans. They seemed either unaware or unwilling to acknowledge that an important source of their wrath was an action taken by the same body – Congress – three decades earlier – the Foreign Investors Tax Act of 1966 (FITA). The declared purpose of FITA was to restructure the U.S. tax system for nonresident aliens (NRAs) and to remove “those tax roadblocks which have discouraged foreign investments in this country.” In a nutshell, FITA established considerable tax advantages for NRAs. For example, for them – and only for them – it eliminated taxation of interest and capital gains. The cumulative effect of FITA was to transform the United States into a tax haven for foreign investors.

See Appendix A, infra note 522 and accompanying text. The Revenue Act of 1864 was allowed to expire in 1872.

See Appendix A, infra note 563 and accompanying text.

Congress anticipated that because FITA offered such favorable conditions that were not available to U.S. residents or citizens, some Americans might be motivated to leave the United States and renounce U.S. citizenship to benefit from the new tax regime for NRAs.\textsuperscript{285} For Congress this was not acceptable; its solution was the creation of an expatriation tax.\textsuperscript{286}

FITA’s expatriation tax applied for a period of ten years to the U.S.-source income of individuals whose principal motive for expatriation was to avoid U.S. taxation.\textsuperscript{287} In practice, however, the legislation was ineffective at reducing the tax benefits of expatriation offered by FITA. The IRS was not informed of expatriations, determining the tax avoidance motive was difficult, individuals could restructure their assets to escape the tax, and enforcement over a period of ten years with respect to persons living outside the country was impossible.\textsuperscript{288}

Even if FITA’s expatriation tax was ineffective, however, there is no evidence that FITA motivated a mass exodus from the United States, or even much of an exodus at all. To the contrary, it appears that relatively few persons renounced U.S. citizenship in the three decades following adoption of FITA in 1966. In that year 379\textsuperscript{289} persons renounced US citizenship while in 1993 a total of 306\textsuperscript{290} — 73 fewer — persons renounced.\textsuperscript{291}

\textsuperscript{285} “[An exit tax is necessary because] the bill . . . may encourage some individuals to surrender their U.S. citizenship and move abroad . . . . [B]y doing so an expatriate would avoid the graduated tax rates on his U.S. investment income (and, in certain cases, avoid some estate taxes].” REPORT OF THE COMM. ON FIN. U. S. SENATE TO ACCOMPANY H.R. 13103 A BILL TO PROVIDE EQUITABLE TAX TREATMENT FOR FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN THE UNITED STATES, S. Rep. No. 1707, at 28 (Oct. 11, 1966).

\textsuperscript{286} Id.

\textsuperscript{287} See Taxes for Expats, supra note 284.

\textsuperscript{288} Id. The Committee on Taxation of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York foresaw this result. In its 1966 written statement to the House Committee on Ways and Means, it recommended against the expatriation penalties, stating:

[I]t may be questioned whether, on the one hand, the position of nonresident aliens is so greatly improved by the bill that U.S. citizens not otherwise prompted to expatriate themselves for tax reasons will now be induced to do so or, on the other hand, whether the penalties themselves are severe enough to prevent significant tax advantage from being gained for such surrender . . . . Enforcement of such a provision can hardly be uniform; and lack of uniformity is further suggested in the exception provided for cases of dual citizenship. Moreover, it seems questionable whether, from a national policy standpoint, the United States should undertake such measures against persons willing to surrender their citizenship.

\textsuperscript{289} WEIL, THE SOVEREIGN CITIZEN, supra note 68, at 199.

\textsuperscript{291} Compare this to the 6,705 renunciants listed for 2020. Table 4, supra note 91 and accompanying text. Just 157 renounced in 1992. See McMenamin, supra note 290.
Apparently, however, it was too many. A November 1994 article in Forbes magazine sarcastically entitled “The New Refugees”\(^{292}\) told the story of a handful of wealthy persons who had expatriated in “recent years.” The article made no mention of how FITA – an act of Congress – had made expatriation attractive for some. Instead, the article compared the low taxes of the Reagan era to those of the Clinton era and blamed the expatriations on “Clintonomics and wealth redistribution.”\(^{293}\)

The article created a firestorm. Lawmakers couldn’t declare their animus towards overseas Americans forcefully enough, both in the Congressional record and to the media:

[Americans] are going to great lengths, thousands of miles to other countries, to avoid paying their fair share. In a metaphorical sense, burning the flag, giving up what should be their most sacred possession, their American citizenship, to find a tax loophole. . . . These are precisely the sort of greedy, unpatriotic people that FDR called malefactors of great wealth. . . . Let us not allow more of these rich freeloaders to get away.

(Sen. Max Baucus, 1995)\(^{294}\)

I would hope that one day we will just publish the names of people that America has given so much to and that they care so little about that citizenship that they would flee in order to avoid taxes.

(Rep. Charles Rangel, 1995)\(^{295}\)

How can you say that we should all do our share in America, including making all the kids, and the elderly people, and everybody else, have to contribute to the deficit, to bring it down, and at the same time allow these sleazy bums, who don’t want to pay their taxes, to leave this country, and renounce their citizenship, and expect me to have one iota of sympathy for them?

---

\(^{293}\) Id.

If you’ve gotten your riches from America, you should pay your fair share of taxes. These expatriates are really like economic Benedict Arnolds.

(Leslie Samuels, Ass’t Sec. (Tax Policy), U.S. Department of the Treasury, 1995) 297

This barefaced animus – which, again, was a consequence of FITA, an act of Congress – led directly to two more acts of Congress, both adopted in 1996: (i) the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act, which expanded tax penalties for expatriation, created a presumption that expatriation is for tax avoidance purposes if the expatriate’s income tax or net worth surpassed specified amounts, and instituted the “Quarterly Publication of Individuals Who Have Chosen to Expatriate” 298 (also referred to as the “Name and Shame List”) 299; and (ii) the Reed Amendment, which seeks to bar entry into the United States of former U.S. citizens who are determined to have renounced U.S. citizenship for the purpose of avoiding taxation by the United States. 300

4. Legal Titles and Terminology

Congress has communicated its animus towards overseas Americans in the very titles and terminology of its laws.

The Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (2010), or “FATCA” is an allusion to “fat cats,” 301 a derogatory expression referring to persons who have become wealthy through questionable means. Senator Sheldon Whitehouse confirmed the animus contained in this name when he stated during a 2021 Congressional hearing, “[i]t’s too bad that we couldn’t put an extra ‘T’ on it. Then it would say FAT CAT which would be such an 298 See Appendix A, infra notes 606-607 and accompanying text. The penalties for expatriation were again expanded in 2008. Appendix A, infra note 614 and accompanying text.

---

300 See Appendix A, infra note 608 and accompanying text. See also supra notes 92-96 and accompanying text.

appropriate acronym for it.” 302 The IRS, also, has expressed its animus towards overseas Americans who hold bank accounts in the countries where they live; The IRS refers to them as “suspected” U.S. persons—terminology typically reserved for persons believed to have committed a crime. 303

Global Intangible Low-Taxed Income, or “GILTI,” this is the name assigned by the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act (2017) to a tax on the earnings of non-U.S. companies that are controlled by U.S. persons. 304 The name leaves no doubt about the animus members of Congress hold for those subject to the law: they are guilty.

In sum, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system was conceived in and is maintained by unequivocal and long-standing animus towards overseas Americans. For this reason alone, it violates the Fourteenth Amendment.

The future does not bode well. A 2022 candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives has described overseas Americans as “dirtbags.” 305 Further, a 2023 report issued by the Senate Finance Committee asserts “[d]ual citizenship affords unique opportunities for cross-border tax evasion.” 306 The majority of overseas Americans hold dual citizenship. 307

---

304 See Appendix A, infra notes 628-629 and accompanying text.

305 Max Steiner (@MaxSteinerCA ), Twitter (Dec. 27, 2021), https://twitter.com/MaxSteinerCA/status/1475598854158311425.

D. Law Must Rationally Relate to a Legitimate Public Interest

If no other equal protection argument is available, then the “rational basis” level of review is applied. This is considered the least stringent review, where a court considers whether the classification has a legitimate purpose and whether the governmental action has a rational relationship with that purpose.

This is, arguably, the level of review applied by the Court in Cook.308 Assuming that it is, then it would appear at first glance that the question of whether the U.S. extraterritorial tax system passes a rational basis review has been asked and answered. However, the tax system that the Court reviewed in Cook bears no resemblance to the system in place today. As explained in Part III(A) above309 and as evidenced by Appendix A,310 today’s system is far more punitive and far-reaching. It is ripe for re-review.

For the purposes of this review, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system can be considered as three basic components: (1) the taxation of overseas Americans on an ongoing basis, (2) FATCA, and (3) the exit tax. Section (4) below addresses the question of judicial deference in tax related issues.

1. The Taxation of Overseas Americans on an Ongoing Basis

As mentioned above, several rationales have been offered to explain why the United States should tax the worldwide income of overseas Americans.311 A synthesis of those rationales is, in essence, that U.S. taxation is the counterpart of U.S. citizenship. But if this were the case — if U.S. taxation was truly the counterpart of U.S. citizenship, then:

- Residents of the United States who are not citizens would be exempt from U.S. taxation, or inversely, as soon as they became subject to U.S. taxation, they would be granted U.S. citizenship as a matter of right;
- Green card holders living outside the United States would not be subject to worldwide taxation by the United States, given that they are not citizens; and
- Nonresident aliens who have U.S.-source income would not be subject to U.S. taxation on that income, given they are not citizens.

308 See supra notes 108-125 and accompanying text.
309 Supra notes 38, 51-61 and accompanying text.
310 Infra notes 519-690 and accompanying text.
311 Supra notes 165-169 and accompanying text. See generally Snyder, Rationalized, supra note 165.
The fact that none of those statements is true demonstrates that U.S. taxation is not, in reality, the counterpart of U.S. citizenship.

Further, in the decades after Cook was decided the United States became party to two international human rights instruments guaranteeing citizenship (nationality) as a human right. It is antithetical to the most fundamental premise of human rights to impose taxation in counterpart.

Further, assuming the United States had a legitimate purpose in taxing the worldwide income of its overseas citizens for no reason other than their U.S. citizenship, how it taxes them bears no rational relationship to whatever that purpose may be. The United States imposes upon overseas Americans a system of taxation that is far more comprehensive, penalty laden and punitive than that imposed upon U.S. residents. There is no way to rationalize the penalizing nature of the current system. There are no circumstances under which the United States could have a rational – or moral – interest in penalizing its overseas citizens for engaging in ordinary economic activities that are essential for life in the modern world – activities such as saving for retirement, investing, owning a home, operating a business, or holding a bank account. Nor are there circumstances under which the United States could have a rational – or moral – interest in instituting or perpetuating a tax system that it is unable to administer.

---

312 UDHR, Appendix A, infra note 541 at art. 15, ¶ 1(“Everyone has the right to a nationality”); art. 15(2) “No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality”). See also ICERD, Appendix A, infra note 601, at art. 5, ¶ (d)(iii)( declaring the right to nationality). The United States is a signatory to the UDHR and has ratified the ICERD. See also Karen Alpert, Laura Snyder & John Richardson, The Implications of Tax Residence for Human Rights at 16-20 (Feb. 10, 2020), https://az659834.vo.msecnd.net/eventsairseasiaprod/production-tcm-public/8f91c37e383447feb6e21cb732414dae [https://perma.cc/93ZA-85EQ] (prepared for the “Accounting & Finance Association of Australia and New Zealand” (AFAANZ) 2020 Annual Conference); Appendix A, infra notes 541, 601 and accompanying text.

315 See generally Snyder et al., Mission Impossible, infra note 94; and infra notes 497-498.
2. FATCA

FATCA was adopted in reaction to a report issued by Senator Carl Levin claiming that the United States lost an estimated $100 billion in tax revenues due to offshore tax abuses. The figure of $100 billion was justified with references to studies of offshore accounts held by U.S. residents and of multinational companies engaged in fraudulent transfer pricing arrangements involving intellectual property. Neither Levin’s report nor any of the studies cited in Levin’s report addressed overseas Americans who bank and otherwise carry out their financial affairs in the countries where they live. At no point was it asserted, much less demonstrated, that overseas Americans engage in U.S. tax evasion or that their accounts are used for that purpose.

Nevertheless, FATCA was drafted to apply to all U.S. citizens regardless of where they live in the world, and to encompass all financial accounts held by U.S. citizens outside the United States, including those held by overseas Americans in the countries where they live. The result has been devastating for overseas Americans; in the countries where they live, FATCA has led to the denial of banking and other financial services, of ownership of family assets, of mortgages, and of employment, entrepreneurial, and community service opportunities.

The United States has a legitimate purpose in reducing tax evasion and the use of offshore accounts for tax evasion. However, because FATCA has such a broad application, it does not bear a rational relationship to that purpose. There is no rational relationship between, on the one hand, the offshore accounts held by U.S. residents (U.S. nationals or not) that may be used for tax evasion and, on the other hand, the local accounts held by U.S. nationals in the countries where they live and pay taxes – accounts that are necessary for normal life in the modern world. At least one data-driven study provides evidence that this is the case.

---

316 Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3 at 2283-84; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 307-8.
317 Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3 at 2284; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 307-8.
318 Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3 at 2284; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 308.
319 Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3 at 2284; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 308.
320 Subject to a threshold. See Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 309.
Also exposing the irrationality of FATCA is the availability of the Common Reporting Standard (CRS), developed by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) in 2014. Since 2017 approximately 110 countries have joined CRS, pursuant to which they share information about accounts that persons (regardless of citizenship) hold outside their country of residence. This is in direct contrast to FATCA, pursuant to which the country where a person lives transmits information about that person to a country where that person does not live – the United States. Further, CRS is a mutual exchange of information whereas FATCA is a one-way only transmittal of information from other countries to the United States. CRS would offer to the United States a means to obtain information about the accounts U.S. residents (regardless of citizenship) hold in other countries. This would address FATCA’s ostensible purpose – to combat offshore tax abuse – without FATCA’s devastating overreach. However, to date the United States has declined to join CRS.

Yet further exposing the irrationality of FATCA is the fact that the IRS does not have the resources required to process the vast quantities of data it receives from countries around the world. This problem was first exposed in 2018 by the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA). After an audit, TIGTA concluded that, despite spending nearly $380 million, the IRS “is still not prepared to enforce compliance” 325 The fact that the United States has not joined CRS is an important reason why today – more than five decades after the adoption of the Foreign Investors Tax Act of 1966 – the United States is the “world’s leading perpetrator of financial secrecy” and “a generous tax haven for foreign oligarchs, rich executives, and other elites.” Jake Johnson, A Shameful Distinction: US Ranked World’s Biggest Perpetrator of Financial Secrecy, COMMON DREAMS (May 17, 2022), https://www.commondreams.org/news/2022/05/17/shameful-distinction-us-ranked-worlds-biggest-perpetrator-financial-secrecy (citing Tax Justice Network’s 2022 Financial Secrecy Index, placing the United States at the top of a list of jurisdictions the “most complicit in helping individuals to hide their finances from the rule of law”). Tax Justice Network, Financial Secrecy Index 2022 (accessed June 24, 2023), https://fsi.taxjustice.net/.

---

of FATCA.\textsuperscript{326} Four years later nothing had changed; After a 2022 audit, TIGTA observed that from 2010 to 2020 the IRS spent $574 million on FATCA implementation, still without any demonstration of compliance.\textsuperscript{327} In his 2022 testimony to the House of Representatives’ Committee on Ways and Means, then IRS Commissioner Charles Rettig lamented Congress’s failure to authorize the necessary resources: “[Because of limited resources,] we are often left with manual processes to analyze reporting information we receive. Such is the case with data from [FATCA]. Congress enacted FATCA in 2010, but we have yet to receive any significant funding appropriation for its implementation.”\textsuperscript{328}

During the more than one decade since Congress adopted FATCA Congress has failed to authorize the funding necessary to assure compliance. In the meantime, FATCA has served no purpose other than to harass and intimidate overseas Americans and financial institutions. There are no circumstances under which the United States has a rational – or moral – interest in harassing and intimidating its overseas citizens because they engage in normal banking activities in the countries where they live.

3. Exit (Expatriation) Tax

As discussed above,\textsuperscript{329} the first exit (expatriation) tax was created in 1966, when Congress granted considerable tax advantages to NRAs, effectively turning the United States into a tax haven for foreign investors. When Congress did that, it anticipated that some individuals may be encouraged “to surrender their U.S. citizenship and move abroad.”\textsuperscript{330} It was clear that Congress was concerned with persons who were then living in \textsuperscript{326} Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration, Despite Spending Nearly $380 Million, the Internal Revenue Service Is Still Not Prepared to Enforce Compliance with the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act, Reference No. 2018-30-040, at 1 (July 5, 2018).

\textsuperscript{327} Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration, Additional Actions Are Needed to Address Non-Filing and Non-Reporting Compliance Under the Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act, Reference No. 2022-30-019, at ii (April 7, 2022). The report states: “To date, the IRS has been unable to quantify revenue generated from FATCA compliance activity beyond the $14 million in revenue from penalties unrelated to the campaigns, despite spending over $574 million on implementation and establishing two campaigns that have sent out 847 letters to taxpayers.” Id. at 21-22. See also Robert Goulder, The TIGTA Report: Lessons From a Decade of FATCA, TAX NOTES (May 6, 2022), https://www.taxnotes.com/featured-analysis/tigta-report-lessons-decade-fatca/2022/05/06/7dgb7 (stating “FATCA’s scope is overinclusive, and it has been from day one”).

\textsuperscript{329} Supra notes 282-286 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{330} REPORT OF THE COMM. ON FIN, supra note 286 and accompanying text.
the United States and whose financial interests—principally investments—were centered in the United States. Congress was concerned that at least some of them might choose to move out of the country and renounce U.S. citizenship for the purpose of benefitting from the new, favorable tax regime offered to NRAs with investments in the United States. At no point did Congress express any specific interest in or concern with Americans already living outside the United States—persons whose financial interests are centered in a country other than the United States. Nor at any point did Congress consider the consequences the newly created expatriation tax might have for them.

As also discussed above, three decades later (in 1994) Forbes published an article depicting a handful of wealthy Americans who had done exactly what Congress had feared: they moved out of the United States—for the most part to countries reputed as tax havens, such as the Bahamas and the Cayman Islands—and renounced their U.S. citizenship while maintaining their financial interests in the United States, thus enabling them to benefit from the favorable tax treatment accorded to foreign investors. The outrage that the Forbes article provoked from members of Congress and other lawmakers was palpable. They called these former Americans “rich freeloaders,” “malefactors of great wealth,” “sleazy bums,” and “economic Benedict Arnolds.” These former Americans were people who had “gotten [their] riches from America,” but who then wouldn’t “pay [their] fair share.” Congress couldn’t act quickly enough to expand the penalties for renunciation of U.S. citizenship and even to seek to bar reentry into the United States. Again, however, there is no evidence that any separate consideration was made for Americans residing outside the United States on a long-term basis—in ordinary, not tax haven, countries—and whose financial interests were centered outside the United States.

Since the 1990s Congress has acted twice more—in 2004 and 2008—to expand the breadth and depth of the tax consequences of

---

331 Supra note 292 and accompanying text.
332 Supra notes 294-297 and accompanying text.
333 Id.
335 See Appendix A, infra note 613 and accompanying text.
336 See Appendix A, infra note 614 and accompanying text.
expatriation. Today the consequences are complex as well as highly penalizing. The exit tax regime can be summarized as follows.

To begin, the regime applies to persons renouncing U.S. citizenship who meet one of these three criteria: (i) their “average annual net income tax” for the five taxable years ending before the expatriation date is more than US$178,000; (ii) the net value of their assets totals $2 million or more (an amount that is not indexed for inflation); or (iii) they fail to certify to the IRS (via Form 8854) that they have complied with all U.S. federal tax obligations for the five years preceding the date of expatriation.

If a person meets at least one of these criteria, they are called a “covered expatriate.” Covered expatriates are subject to the exit tax regime, which has several components: (i) a tax upon the net unrealized gain on all their worldwide assets as if such property were sold for its fair market value on the day before the expatriation date; (ii) “specific tax deferred accounts” are treated as distributed and are subject to income taxation; and (iii) the present value of non-U.S. pension and other deferred compensation plans is included in income and subject to taxation. This tax applies regardless of whether any such assets have been sold, and so regardless of whether there is any cash available to pay the tax. In each case the income inclusion takes place on the day before expatriation and encompasses the pension, home, and other assets accumulated while the expatriate was living outside the United States – thus, without the use of U.S. resources.

At first glance one might conclude that only a few people are concerned by the exit tax given how high the dollar thresholds appear to be. However, the net asset value threshold of $2 million includes the value of the expatriate’s home. Many overseas Americans live in countries with a high cost of living. For example, in 2022 the average price for a two-bedroom apartment in London was more than $1 million.

338 This amount is subject to adjustment for inflation.

339 See Gelardi, supra note 337 at 91. Special rules apply in the case of persons who were dual citizens from birth and who meet certain other conditions. Id. See also IRS, Expatriation Tax (updated Mar. 9, 2023), https://www.irs.gov/individuals/international-taxpayers/expatriation-tax.

340 See Gelardi, supra note 337 at 92-93.

341 Id.

In Paris, the price for a two-bedroom apartment can range from a low of $1.3 million (€1.2 million) to $2.5 million (€2.3 million) and more.\(^{345}\) In Toronto the average price for a detached home has exceeded $1.5 million (CAD$ 2 million).\(^{346}\) While clearly the owners of such homes are not poor, nor does the ownership of these homes make them wealthy; these are the prices everyone who lives in these metropolitan areas are required to pay to have a roof over their head. Further, many Americans have resided outside the United States for decades;\(^{347}\) they purchased the homes where they live with their families when the prices were far below their market value today.\(^{348}\)

When the value of the expatriate’s home is combined with the value of their other assets, such as a pension or a small business, it becomes clear that the U.S. exit tax ensnares many overseas Americans who are middle class. Their principal – if not only – assets are the home they live in and the pension with which they expect to retire.

Further, regardless of the extent of their wealth, Americans who have lived overseas on a long-term basis did not “get their riches from America,”\(^{349}\) nor have they otherwise “freeloaded”\(^{350}\) off the United States to gain any wealth they may have. To the contrary, when they left the United States – often as babies, or in their teens, 20s, or 30s – they generally owned few, if any, assets.\(^{351}\) And some overseas Americans \(^{347}\) See SEAT Survey—Data Part 1 of 2, supra note 203, at 11 (showing that 66% of survey participants left the United States more than 10 years ago and 44% left more than 20 years ago).

\(^{348}\) See, e.g., John Clarke, When Canada’s Housing Bubble Pops, It Will Cause Misery and Ruin, Jacobin (Jan. 6, 2022), https://jacobin.com/2022/01/canadahousing market-real-estate (explaining that in the previous two decades, home prices in Canada went up by 375 percent. The increases were especially pronounced in Toronto and Vancouver, up by 450 and 490 percent respectively); Aussie, 25 Years of Housing Trends (accessed June 24, 2023), https://www.aussie.com.au/content/dam/australian/documents/home-loans/australian_25_years_report.pdf (demonstrating that between 1993 and 2018, national median house values in Australia grew by 412 percent). See also Property Prices in France Have Doubled in 10 Years, Study Finds, The Connextion (Sept. 1, 2021), https://www.connextionfrance.com/article/practical/property/property-prices-in-france-have-doubled-in-10-years-study-finds.

\(^{349}\) Supra note 297 and accompanying text.

\(^{350}\) Supra note 294 and accompanying text.

\(^{351}\) See, e.g., SEAT Survey—Data Part 1 of 2, supra note 203, at 7-8 (indicating that participants in a survey of overseas Americans have modest incomes (66% have individual annual income of less than $75,000 and 25% less than $25,000), and few are wealthy (47% have savings of less than $50,000)). See also id., at 10 (indicating that 46% of overseas Americans left the United States to join a romantic partner or to pursue professional opportunities and 10% left as children, with their families). See id. at 9 (indicating that of U.S. citizens who have never lived in the United States — they were born outside the country to at least one U.S.-citizen parent. 352

These overseas Americans who renounce U.S. citizenship have nothing to do with the "malefactors of great wealth" 353 and "economic Benedict Arnolds" 354 that each iteration of the U.S. expatriation/exit tax was intended to target. 355 Most of these overseas Americans are ordinary middle class and, to the extent they have accumulated any wealth, it was done using the resources of the countries where they live. Given they have not built their wealth in the United States, they are not renouncing for the reason Congress anticipated — to benefit from the favorable tax regime accorded to foreign investment in the United States. Instead, their purpose in renouncing is to be able to live normal lives in the countries where they have lived for years if not decades, freed from the highly penalizing U.S. extraterritorial tax system. Extending the exit tax to them is not rational because it imposes considerable hardship upon them without any possibility of serving the stated purpose of the tax. 356

Other countries have also faced the issue of how to prevent tax abuse when a resident leaves their country to live elsewhere. They assess a tax at the time the person in question departs their country to live in another. Unlike the United States (which practices both residency-based and citizenship-based taxation), these countries practice residency-based taxation only. Citizenship bears no relevance to tax status and their departure taxes apply to all departing residents regardless of citizenship. 357

The United States has a legitimate purpose in preventing tax abuse.
The stated purpose of the U.S. exit tax is to discourage wealthy U.S.

353 Id.
354 Supra note 297 and accompanying text.
355 Nothing in the legislative histories of the various iterations of the exit (expatriation) tax mentions any wrongdoing by Americans living overseas on a long-term basis. See supra notes 286. See also Snyder, Rationalized, supra note 165 at 600 n.317.
356 See, e.g., Richardson, Canadian Pensions, supra note 342.
357 Examples include Canada and Denmark, which assesses a tax on the value of a variety of different assets at the time of departure, and France, whose departure taxed is assessed only on the value of corporate stock. See Mathieu De Lajartre, The Tax Consequences of Leaving nada/2021-05-31-departure-tax; PWC, Denmark Individual - Other Taxes (updated Feb. 27, 2023), https://taxsummaries.pwc.com/denmark/individual/other-taxes#:~:text=Exit%20taxation%20applies%20for%20individuals,%2C%20certain%20property%20investments%2C%20etc; Direction Générale des Finances Publiques, Do I Have to Pay an “Exit Tax”? (updated April 22, 2021), https://www.impots.gouv.fr/international-particulier/questions/i-ai-leaving-france-do-i-have-pay-exit-tax. See also infra notes 510-511 and accompanying text.
residents from “taking advantage” of the resources of the United States to build their fortunes, only to leave the country to then benefit from the favorable tax treatment accorded to foreign investors. The experience of other countries demonstrates it is possible to accomplish this purpose by imposing a departure tax that is triggered upon departure from the country, not upon renunciation of citizenship. The United States has no rational – or moral – interest in extending its exit tax to encompass persons who for the most part are middle class and who, to the extent they have any wealth, gained it while living outside the United States and using resources outside the United States.

4. Deference in Tax-Related Issues?

It is said that the Court practices special deference to tax legislation, almost never finding it unconstitutional. Assuming this is the case (it is not clear that it is), the reason commonly offered is that “logically, any imposition of any tax is rationally related to raising revenue, [which is] a singular and uncontroversially legitimate end.”

To begin, and as discussed above, MMT teaches that the United States federal government, as a sovereign currency issuer, does not tax to raise revenue. To the contrary, the federal government must first issue

---

358 Supra notes 285-300 and accompanying text.
359 See Stephen W. Mazza & Tracy A. Kaye, Restricting the Legislative Power to Tax in the United States, 54 AM. J. COMP. L. 641, 656 (2006) (quoting Regan v. Taxation with Representation of Washington (461 U.S. 540 (1983)). In Regan, the Supreme Court rejected a First Amendment challenge to a provision in the federal tax code denying tax-exempt status for substantial lobbying activities:

[I]n taxation, even more than in other fields, legislatures possess the greatest freedom in classification. . . . [The presumption of constitutionality can be overcome only by the most explicit demonstration that a classification is a hostile and oppressive discrimination against particular persons and classes. The burden is on the one attacking the legislative arrangement to negate every conceivable basis which might support it. 461 U.S. at 547-48. See also Reuven Avi-Yonah, Should U.S. Tax Law Be Constitutionalized? Centennial Reflections on Eisner v. Macomber (1920), 16 DUKE J. CONST. L. & PUB. POL’Y 65, 88 (2021) (observing that the U.S. Supreme Court has not held a federal income tax provision unconstitutional since 1920). But see discussion of United States v. Windsor regarding the federal estate tax, supra notes 263-266, infra note 371, and accompanying text.

360 See Suzanne B. Goldberg, Equality Without Tiers, 77 S. CAL. L. REV. 481 (2004) (citing multiple decisions, many adopted after Regan, in which the Court invalidated tax-related classifications as lacking a rational basis for equal protection purposes. Examples include: (i) the taxation of out-of-state car purchases. Id. at 489; (ii) a value-added tax imposed on foreign but not domestic corporations. Id. at 497 n.62; (iii) an arbitrary gross receipts tax. Id.; (iv) a New Mexico tax preference distinguishing between long-term and short-term resident Vietnam veterans. Id. at 513 n.120; (v) a use tax that burdened out-of-state car buyers Id.; (vi) an Alabama law that provided tax relief to in-state but not foreign businesses. Id.; (vii) the discriminatory application of a West Virginia tax assessment law. Id. at 535).

362 Supra notes 172-176 and accompanying text.
currency for there to be currency in the economy to tax back. A sovereign currency issuer does have legitimate reasons to tax — such as to seek to control inflation or inequality, or to encourage or discourage specific behaviors — but raising revenue is not one of them.\footnote{363}

Further, there are multiple examples of taxes that were adopted without any purpose of raising revenue and, if they did, it was incidental. One is the high marginal tax rates (over 90%) that the U.S. Congress adopted in the mid-twentieth century.\footnote{364} There was little expectation that such rates would result in significantly increased tax revenue. Instead, the expectation as well as the effect was to discourage high salaries and other forms of income, given any income over the applicable threshold would be taxed away.\footnote{365} Such high marginal rates were not, and were not intended to be, “rationally” related to raising revenue. Another example are the various excess (or windfall) profits taxes that the United States has adopted at different times in its history, generally when the country was at war. Their purpose was not to gain revenue but to ensure that companies could not profit from war or from some other emergency (such as an energy crisis) considered to lead to unjust enrichment.\footnote{366}

If the lessons of MMT were set aside and it was accepted that the federal government needed to tax for the purpose of raising revenue, this would not mean that raising “any” tax revenue is a “singular and uncontroversially legitimate end.”\footnote{367}

\footnote{363} Id.
\footnote{366} See, e.g., Reuven Avi-Yonah, Time to Tax Excessive Corporate Profits, AM. PROSPECT, April 18, 2022, https://prospect.org/economy/time-to-tax-excessive-corporate-profits/ (explaining why the United States implemented windfall profits taxes in the past and arguing that one should be implemented now to prevent companies from earning windfall profits due to the COVID-19 pandemic and the war in Ukraine). Avi-Yonah expressly states that the purpose of the tax would not be to raise revenue but to “induce a fall in prices, which would benefit everyone except corporate shareholders.” Id.
\footnote{367} See supra note 361 and accompanying text.
Marshall wrote “the power to tax involves the power to destroy [. . .] To carry it to the excess of destruction would be an abuse, to presume which would banish that confidence which is essential to all Government.”368

If it were true that raising “any” tax revenue was a “singular and uncontroversially legitimate end,”369 what would prevent Congress from imposing a 100% income tax from the first dollar? What would prevent it from taxing the worldwide income of all persons in the world, regardless of country of residence? Given the United States has already instituted an extraterritorial tax system that it applies to millions of people370 living outside the country based upon one nationality, would it be such a big step to extend the system to all nationalities? What would prevent Congress from applying different tax regimes dependent upon a person’s race, gender, or sexual orientation? Indeed, when the U.S. Supreme Court invalidated the 1996 Defense of Marriage Act in United States v. Windsor, it did so because the Act lead to unequal treatment with respect to federal taxation, based upon sexual orientation.371 These absurd examples demonstrate Marshall’s point: that there must be restraints of some kind upon the federal government’s power to tax, or it can lead not just to irrational but also to destructive results (such as, in the case of overseas Americans, the destruction of citizenship).372 Ultimately, if there were no equal protection limits upon the power of Congress to tax, Congress would have license to violate equal protection guarantees, provided the violations were channeled through the tax system.373

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system offers further examples of laws that were adopted without the purpose of raising revenue from overseas Americans. Senator Collamer explained that overseas Americans ought to “pay a higher rate of tax”374 not because the government needs the revenue, but because overseas Americans “skulk” away to Paris.375 Senator Hoar explained that the overseas American is the “one human being we ought to tax,”376 again not because the government needs the revenue, but simply because they went abroad.377

368 McCulloch v. Maryland, 17 U.S. 316, 431 (1819).
369 See supra notes 361, 367 and accompanying text.
370 Estimates of the number of Americans living outside the United States range from 5.5 to 9 million. See Snyder, Unacknowledged Realities, supra note 6 at 272.
371 See supra notes 263-266 and accompanying text.
372 Supra notes 82-107 and accompanying text.
373 This is also demonstrated in the hypothetical example discussed above of tax enforcement agents forcibly entering homes to confiscate cash or items of value, for no reason other than to raise revenue. Supra note 171 and accompanying text.
374 Supra note 278 and accompanying text.
375 Id.
376 Supra notes 280-281 and accompanying text.
377 Id.
The U.S. extraterritorial tax system is replete with provisions whose purpose is not to raise revenue but to discourage – if not entirely end – certain behaviors, and to punish those who engage in them. Examples include the punitive tax regimes applied to mutual funds (PFICs) and to non-U.S. retirement accounts (foreign trusts), as well as FATCA and the exit tax. Each of these regimes was adopted in reaction to abuses committed by U.S. residents; in no case were any tax abuses by long-term overseas Americans cited, nor in any case was it expected that the law would result in increased revenue from them.

The fact that the purpose of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system is not to raise revenue is borne out in the system’s consequences. The amount it raises is negligible: just 0.51% of the total U.S. tax liability for individuals, which represents 0.19% of total spending by the federal government. Further, the system’s devastating effects for overseas Americans have little to do with the payment of U.S. taxes; most do not owe U.S. tax. As explained above, the system is so penalizing it prevents overseas Americans from living normal lives in the places where they live. For many the situation becomes so intolerable they feel they have no choice but to take the drastic and – as Chief Justice Marshall pre-378 The PFIC rules have been described as “wall[ing] off” U.S. investors from foreign mutual funds. See Appendix A, infra note 592 and accompanying text.

---

379 See Caldwell & Nagel, infra note 575 at 676-77 (describing tax abuses relating to foreign trusts committed by U.S residents, and explaining that prior to the adoption of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, which expanded measures relating to foreign trusts, the Treasury Department had consistently urged Congress to adopt measures discouraging the use of foreign trusts). The result, Caldwell & Nagel explain, is to give domestic trusts more favorable treatment than foreign trusts (that is, the result is not and was not intended to be raising revenue). Id. at 677.
380 The purpose of FATCA was to discourage the use of offshore accounts by U.S. residents. See supra note 319 and accompanying text. There is no evidence that FATCA has resulted in any increased revenue. See supra notes 326-328 and accompanying text.
381 See supra note 286 (citing a 1966 report to Congress explaining that an exit tax was needed to discourage expatriation (so not to raise revenue). See also William Thomas Worster, Human Rights Law and the Taxation Consequences for Renouncing Citizenship, 62 ST. LOUIS. UNIV. L. J. 85, 100 n.109 (2017) (citing a 1995 letter from Leslie B. Samuels, then Assistant Secretary for Tax Policy, U.S. Dep’t Treas., to Kenneth J. Kies, Chief of Staff, stating that the exit tax is an effort to deter or punish tax-motivated expatriation) (letter reprinted in STAFF OF JOINT COMM. ON TAXATION, 104TH CONG., ISSUES PRESENTED BY PROPOSALS TO MODIFY THE TAX TREATMENT OF EXPATRIATION G-50, G-54 (Joint Comm. Print 1995)); Elise Tang, Solving Taxpatriation: “Realizing” It Takes More Than Amending the Alternative Tax, 31 BROOK. J. INT’L L. 615, 616-17 (2006) (explaining that the “ultimate goal” of the exit tax is to stop tax-motivated expatriation).
382 With respect to FATCA, see supra notes 318-319 and accompanying text. With respect to the exit tax, see supra note 334 and accompanying text.
383 Snyder et al., Buy Their Freedom, supra note 176 at 234; Snyder, Unacknowledged Realities, supra note 6 at 274.
384 Supra note 94.
385 Supra notes 313-314 and accompanying text.
dicted – destructive step of renouncing U.S citizenship. Their purpose is not to avoid paying U.S. taxes but to be able to live normal lives.

Avi-Yonah argues that, in contrast to U.S. state income tax law, U.S. federal income tax law should not be “constitutionalized” (subject to constitutional review by the Supreme Court). He argues this not because he thinks that federal tax law should be exempt from equal protection scrutiny – to the contrary, he asserts that it should be subject to such scrutiny – but because, in his opinion, the U.S. Supreme Court is “not up to the task.” Instead, Avi-Yonah argues, it should fall to Congress to assess tax laws “against a constitutional equal protection standard.” But this position places the fox in charge of the hen house. It ignores the essential role of the U.S. Supreme Court both to ensure that the other two branches of government recognize the limits of their power and to protect fundamental rights by striking down laws that violate the Constitution. It also ignores that in 1982 Congress expressly rejected as “obsolete” any obligation for the federal government to provide “fair and equitable treatment” for overseas Americans with respect to taxation as well as other issues. It ignores the U.S. Supreme Court itself which, in Cleburne, explained that discrimination based upon national origin, alienage, or race, “is unlikely to be soon rectified by legislative means.” In sum, Avi-Yonah’s position abandons overseas Americans – indeed, all Americans – to the consequently unchecked power of the 386 Infra notes 465-468 and accompanying text.

387 Avi-Yonah, Constitutionalized, supra note 359 at 66, 87-88. Even though Avi-Yonah’s analysis is limited to “tax expenditures,” his conclusion is nevertheless a sweeping one encompassing all “tax laws.” Id. at 88. The U.S. Department of Treasury defines “tax expenditures” as “revenue losses attributable to provisions of Federal tax laws which allow a special exclusion, exemption, or deduction from gross income or which provide a special credit, a preferential rate of tax, or a deferral of tax liability.” U.S. Dep’t Treas., Tax Expenditures (accessed June 24, 2023), https://home.treasury.gov/policy-issues/tax-policy/tax-expenditures. Avi-Yonah’s examples of tax expenditures include the exclusion of employer provided health care premiums from income and the deductibility of home mortgage interest and local property taxes. Avi-Yonah, Constitutionalized, supra note 359 at 82-83, 85-86.
388 Avi-Yonah, Constitutionalized, supra note 359 at 88.
389 Id.
390 Id.
394 Supra note 148 and accompanying text.
U.S. Congress. As regards the U.S. extraterritorial tax system, Congress has demonstrated incontrovertibly that it is “not up to the task” of respecting equal protection or other fundamental rights.

5. Summary

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system cannot pass the “rational basis” level of review. As it applies to overseas Americans the system has no legitimate purpose, nor does the United States have a rational interest in maintaining it. It is important to understand that the purpose of the system is not to collect tax revenue and that the devastating effects of the system for overseas Americans have little to do with the payment of U.S. taxes. Finally, any suggestion that, because tax legislation is at issue, a court should assume greater deference in its review is to grant to Congress a license to violate equal protection guarantees, as long as the violations are channeled through the tax code.

E. An Alternative Perspective on Equal Protection

The U.S. Supreme Court’s suspect classification analysis is the subject of multiple critiques. It is described as “rife with inconsistencies and contradictions.”

396 Pollvogt, Beyond, supra note 110 at 796.

397 See Kenji Yoshino, The New Equal Protection, 124 Harv. L. Rev. 747, 747-48 (2011) (explaining that over the past decades, the Court has systematically denied constitutional protection to new groups and curtailed it for already covered groups due to what Yoshino refers to as “pluralism anxiety”).

398 See Pollvogt, Beyond, supra note 110 at 766 n.124 (citing Yoshino, supra note 397 at 757-58).

399 See Pollvogt, Beyond, supra note 110 at 756-58.

400 Id. at 796.
ally permanent.” Further, because the Court treats suspect classification status and heightened scrutiny as “scarce resources,” it preserves the excessively deferential rational basis review as the default standard. The reflexive distinction made between heightened scrutiny and rational basis review reinforces the belief that most discrimination against social groups is presumptively permissible.

Ultimately, Pollvogt argues, suspect classification analysis asks the wrong question. The question should not be which social groups are deserving of special judicial solicitude, be it because of their political marginalization, a characteristic of themselves they cannot control, or a history of discrimination. Instead, the question should be: does the law in question interfere with individual self-determination in an impermissible manner? That is, understanding that most laws can interfere with self-determination, does the law in question impose legal burdens in a way that does not correspond to individual responsibility? Expressed yet another way, does the law rely on status as a proxy for conduct? Pollvogt explains, “such reliance is offensive to democracy even if there is a measure of accuracy to the stereotype.” When a law does rely upon status – or “facial classification” – of persons, then, Pollvogt argues, the burden is on the government to prove an affirmative connection between the trait that defines the targeted group and the governmental and individual interests being regulated.

This alternative analysis for equal protection, Pollvogt explains, is considerably more flexible than suspect classification analysis. Under the latter, once the Court has determined that a classification is suspect, then it is so for all time and for all purposes, thereby freezing our understanding of discrimination and prejudice. In contrast, Pollvogt’s trait-relevancy analysis is fact- and context-specific, allowing for more nuanced and nimble determinations over time. Further, requiring the government to justify all status-based laws forces the government to provide reasons and rationales in every case; this can expose irrational, stereotyped approaches.

Pollvogt’s alternative perspective on equal protection offers a useful alternative means of understanding the U.S. extraterritorial tax system. The system imposes upon persons having the status of U.S. citizen living outside the United States burdens that are not imposed upon persons of any other status, be it a U.S. resident or a non-U.S. citizen living outside

---

401 Id. at 797.
402 Id.
403 Id.
404 Id. at 798-800.
405 Id. at 800.
406 Id. at 801.
407 Id. at 802.
the United States. The singular trait that defines this burdened group is U.S. citizenship. However, there is no connection between citizenship and participation in the U.S. economy. There is no connection between citizenship and the U.S. government’s legitimate interests in taxation. There is no connection between draft dodgers of the Civil War (or of any war) and the overwhelming majority of U.S. citizens living overseas. There is no connection between U.S residents who seek to shelter their assets in foreign trusts and U.S. citizens living overseas who seek to save for retirement. There is no connection between U.S. residents who hide their money in offshore accounts and U.S. citizens living overseas who hold ordinary accounts in their countries of residence (FATCA). There is no connection between, on the one hand, persons who, after acquiring great wealth in the United States, move to a tax haven and renounce U.S. citizenship to benefit from the favorable tax treatment accorded to foreign investors in the United States and, on the other hand, Americans living in ordinary (non-tax haven) countries on a long-term basis, and, to the extent they acquire wealth, do so in their countries of residence (exit tax). There is no connection between multinational companies seeking to shift profits outside the United States and overseas Americans operating small businesses in the countries where they live (Transition Tax and GILTI).

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system relies upon the status of overseas American as a proxy for conduct. The system interferes with the individual self-determination of overseas Americans and imposes legal burdens on them in a manner that does not correspond to their individual responsibility. In sum, Pollvogt’s alternative perspective on equal protection further exposes the profound irrationality and immorality of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system.

IV. SIGNATURE AND RATIFICATION BY THE UNITED STATES OF MULTIPLE HUMAN RIGHTS INSTRUMENTS

Since Cook was decided, the United States has signed, or signed and ratified, multiple international human rights instruments. Today the U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates multiple provisions of these instruments: (A) the right to move from one country to another, (B) the right to work and free choice of employment, (C) equality in dignity and rights, and (D) the freedom from the arbitrary deprivation of one’s nationality.

408 Again, if there were such a connection then residents of the United States who are not citizens would be exempt from U.S. taxation, or inversely, as soon as they became subject to U.S. taxation, they would be granted U.S. citizenship as a matter of right; green card holders living outside the United States would not be subject to worldwide taxation by the United States, given that they are not citizens; and nonresident aliens who have U.S.-source income would not be subject to U.S. taxation on that income, given they are not citizens. See supra text accompanying notes 311-312.
and the right to return to one’s own country; (E) further, when the United States claims as U.S. tax residents persons who do not live in the United States, it is not only violating the rights of those persons but also the rights of the countries where U.S. citizens live – namely the right of those countries to self-determination.

The United States has taken steps to limit – if not entirely nullify – the direct application of these instruments for the country (the United States). Nevertheless, an analysis of how the United States violates these instruments is important because it further exposes the problems and injustices of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system and underscores the system’s immorality. As Talerman explains, international human rights norms are important for “naming and shaming” American civil rights abuses. In addition, the analysis supports the demonstration that, in a discussion of equal protection, the United States has neither a compelling nor a legitimate interest in continuing the U.S. extraterritorial tax system.

A. The Right to Leave One’s Country

Moving in search of a better life is a key driver behind the development of human civilization. The right to move, to distance oneself, or even to run away, is one of the most fundamental guarantees of human liberty. In 1868, the United States Congress itself proclaimed: “[T]he right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensable to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and pursuit of happiness.”

Human rights champion José D. Inglés described the right to leave one’s country as essential for personal self-determination. In 1999 the United Nations Human Rights Committee stated that “liberty of movement is an indispensable condition for the free development of a person.”

The right to move from one country to another has not only been affirmed by defenders of human rights and even the United States Con-

409 See Talerman, infra note 417 at 303-12.
410 Id. at 303.
411 Supra text accompanying notes 165-199, 308-357.
413 Expatriation Act of 1868, see Appendix A, infra note 520 and accompanying text.
gress, but is also enshrined in four international human rights instruments. Each contains a clause in essence stating: “Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country.”

The reiteration of the right to leave one’s country for another in as many as four international human rights instruments underscores the fundamental importance of this right. The United States has signed one of the four instruments (the Universal Declaration of Human Rights) and has both signed and ratified two of them: the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR) and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD).

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates the right to leave a country for another in an insidious manner. While U.S. citizens can remove themselves from the physical territory of the United States, they can never remove themselves from the fiscal territory of the United States. Because of punitive tax rules they find themselves shut out from many investments, from retirement planning, from entrepreneurial opportunities, and from holding many kinds of assets, including owning their home or other real estate jointly with their spouse.

Rather than an obstacle as obvious as physical restraint at the border, overseas Americans instead are faced with a variety of fiscal restraints at multiple touch points in their lives. This has multiple – and significant – repercussions. It prevents the individual from integrating in their community and within their very own family. Given the importance of money and access to assets and finance for normal living much less physical survival, the ultimate effect of these restraints is to deprive the individual of access to essential means of life.

As for those who seek to escape by renouncing U.S. citizenship, two additional hurdles lie in their path: (1) the renunciation fee of $2,350, the 418 See supra notes 313-314 and accompanying text.

world’s highest,419 and (2) for many, the exit tax, which can amount to as much as 39.6% of the value of the former citizen’s worldwide assets as of the day of expatriation.420 As explained above, the tax applies regardless of whether any gains are actually realized, and so regardless of whether any cash is on hand to pay the tax.421

Article 12 of the ICCPR allows for restrictions to be placed upon a person’s freedom to leave a country, including their own. However, this may occur only under exceptional circumstances. As CCPR General Comment No. 27 explains, any restrictions may only be for the purposes of protecting “national security, public order, public health or morals, or the rights and freedoms of others.”422 Any restrictions must also meet each of the criteria below:

- Be “necessary in a democratic society,”
- Be proportionate to the interest to be protected;
- Be appropriate to achieve their protective function;
- Be the least intrusive instrument amongst those which might achieve the desired result; and
- Not impair the essence of the right.423

It is difficult to imagine how the fiscal restraints the United States places upon its citizens living overseas (the inability to save for retirement, to hold a bank account, to operate small business, etc.) could be justified as necessary for the protection of national security, public order, public health or morals, or the rights and freedoms of others. The renunciation fee is even more difficult to justify on any of these grounds. The U.S. State Department has defended the high fee as a response to high demand and paperwork,424 but given it is more than twenty times the average fee for other high-income countries this explanation is difficult to understand.425

419 Wood, World’s Highest Fee, supra note 15. In January 2023, the State Department announced its intention to reduce the fee to $450, but no timeline for implementing the reduction has been proposed. See Kiarra M. Strocko, U.S. Government Set to Reduce Citizenship Renunciation Fee, 178 TAX NOTES FED. 438 (Jan. 16, 2023).
420 Wood, Renounce, supra note 15.
421 Supra note 341 and accompanying text.
422 Human Rights Committee, CCPR General Comment No. 27, supra note 415, at 3. Some limitations on the ability to renounce citizenship are considered permissible under the ICCPR, but only a very small number. The most notable is to prevent statelessness. Others include the need to have adequate mental capacity, not having unfulfilled military service obligations, and not being subject to criminal investigation. See, e.g., Worster, Human Rights Law, supra note 381 at 97-98.
423 Human Rights Committee, CCPR General Comment No. 27, supra note 415, at 3.
Other countries offer examples that the United States can follow with respect to residence-based taxation and a targeted departure tax.\textsuperscript{426} The existence of these examples underscores further that there is no credible argument that the restraints imposed by the U.S. extraterritorial tax system are “necessary in a democratic society,” much less proportionate, appropriate, or the least intrusive means to further any interest that the United States may purport to seek to protect.

It would be difficult to argue that the exit tax does not violate Article 12 of the ICCPR given that as far back as 1966 a Congressional committee report expressly stated that the purpose of the tax was to discourage expatriation.\textsuperscript{427} In 1995 the U.S. Department of Treasury reiterated that the exit tax is an effort to deter or punish tax-motivated expatriation.\textsuperscript{428} And U.S. courts have agreed, stating that this tax is “enacted to forestall tax-motivated expatriation” and “designed to discourage voluntary expatriation.”\textsuperscript{429}

In sum, the fiscal restraints that the United States places upon overseas Americans impair the essence of the fundamental right of any citizen to leave their country. Fiscally, for as long as they are citizens, they cannot leave.

B. The Right to Work, Free Choice of Work and Freedom from Discrimination in Work

Work is essential for material subsistence, for socialization and for self-actualization.\textsuperscript{430} At the same time, it is essential that a person’s work be freely chosen. Free choice of work is important not only to prevent slavery\textsuperscript{431} but also for self-actualization: freely chosen (as opposed to forced) work is essential for human dignity, self-esteem and self-respect,\textsuperscript{432} and for the full development of human capacities.\textsuperscript{433} Freedom from discrimination in hiring as well as promotion is equally essential for human dignity, self-esteem, and self-respect.

The importance of work, of freely chosen work, and of work free from discrimination is amplified in today’s world where precarity of employment is the norm. In the United States, nearly half the population \textsuperscript{426} For examples of departure taxes imposed by other countries, see supra note 357.

\textsuperscript{427} Supra notes 286, 330 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{428} Worster, Human Rights Law, supra note 381 at 100.
\textsuperscript{429} See Worster, Human Rights Law, supra note 381 at 100, 100 n.110 (citing Kronenberg v. Comm’r, 64 T.C. 428, 434 (1975) and Di Portanova v. United States, 690 F.2d 169, 179 (Cl. Ct. 1982)). These decisions predate the signature and ratification by the United States of the ICCPR (1992) and ICERD (1994). Appendix A, infra note 600 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{431} Id. at 173.
\textsuperscript{432} Id. at 178.
\textsuperscript{433} Id. at 181.
works in “low-quality,” low-paying jobs.\footnote{434} A member of Congress, Senator Marco Rubio, has penned multiple articles deploiring that not all Americans in the United States have access to dignified work.\footnote{435}

Like the right to move from one country to another, work-related rights are also enshrined in several human rights instruments. These instruments protect (among other work-related rights): (1) the right to work, (2) the free choice of employment, (3) freedom from discrimination in employment, notably based on national origin, and (4) equal opportunity for promotion in employment, subject to no considerations other than those of seniority and competence.\footnote{436}

As was the case for the right to leave one’s country for another, the reiteration in several international human rights instruments of the rights to work, to free choice of work, and to freedom from discrimination in work underscores the equally fundamental importance of these rights.

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates these fundamental human rights with respect to work in multiple ways:

(1) For those Americans who have created their own small business overseas, many find themselves in severe financial hardship, with some being forced to close, because the U.S. extraterritorial tax system severely penalizes businesses operated by overseas Americans in the countries where they live. Businesses operated in the same countries but by persons of other nationalities are not subject to the same rules, placing businesses operated by overseas Americans at a competitive disadvantage. Given this, it is no surprise that many overseas Americans who would like to create their own businesses have refrained from doing so out of fear that their businesses will suffer the same fate.437

\footnote{436} The three instruments are: (1) UDHR, supra note 416 at art 23(1); (2) ICERD, supra note 416 at art 5(c)(i); (3) GA. Resolution 2200A (XXI), International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, at arts 2, 6(1), and 7(c) (Dec. 16 1966), (hereinafter, “ICESCR”), https://www.ohchr.org/en/professionalinterest/pages/cescr.aspx. As discussed supra text accompanying notes 416-418, the United States has signed the UDHR and has signed and ratified the ICERD. The United States has signed but not ratified the ICESCR.

(2) As an extension of the right to move from one country to another; by restraining this right the United States also restrains the right of Americans to pursue work opportunities in other countries.

(3) To the extent an American would prefer to pursue work opportunities outside the United States but does not do so because of the penalizing nature of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system, their work in the United States cannot be described as “freely chosen.”

(4) Many Americans working overseas face discrimination in hiring and promotion as well as with respect to entrepreneurial opportunities because of their country of origin is the United States: Many non-U.S. employers do not want to hire and/or promote overseas Americans and many non-U.S. entrepreneurs refuse to partner with overseas Americans because of the tax consequences and overall financial instability an overseas American introduces to the enterprise.438

In sum, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system results in multiple violations of the fundamental human rights to work, to free choice of work, and to freedom from discrimination in work.

C. Equality in Dignity and Rights

For Immanuel Kant, the protection of dignity of the person means that a person should be afforded liberties allowing them to live in accordance with ends that they freely chose. By enjoying all liberties, a person can be an autonomous agent with the ability to define their own destiny independently. To achieve this, the state must not take actions which threaten or violate an individual’s enjoyment of all fundamental rights and freedoms.

The dignity of a person cannot be respected and protected if there is no recognition of fundamental rights and freedoms that equally apply to all people, irrespective of their gender, economic status, or nationality. Together with the right to life, the right to human dignity or dignified treatment is viewed as a pillar of social empowerment, social transformation, and economic development.

Karst makes this analysis less abstract. For him, equality is denied when a person is treated as an inferior, when they are treated in a manner that differentiates them from others in such a way that they do not belong, they are not quite human, they are stigmatized. For Karst, an essential element of equality is freedom from stigma.

Equality in dignity and rights is also enshrined in several human rights instruments. These instruments provide that “[a]ll human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights” and that they are “equal before the law” free of any discrimination based on national origin.

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates the principle of equality in dignity and rights in several manners. Overseas Americans, because of their national origin:

- Are stigmatized by potential employers and entrepreneurial partners who fear the tax and financial consequences of employing/partnering with a U.S. citizen;

---

440 Id.
441 Id.
442 Kavuro, supra note 439 at 1513.
443 Id. at 1522.
445 Id. at 249. Kavuro shares this view: supra note 439 at 1531.
446 The three instruments are: (1) UDHR, supra note 416 at art 1; (2) ICCPR, supra note 416 at art 26; (3) ICERD, supra note 416 at art 5. As discussed supra text accompanying notes 416-418, the United States has signed the UDHR and has signed and ratified both the ICCPR and the ICERD.
447 Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3 at 2281, 2286; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 305, 310. See also AARO Survey Article 2, supra note 321 at 2; AARO Survey Article 6, supra note 314 at 1, 3-4, 6-7; DA Survey, supra note 437 at 5, 6, 20, 25-27; SEAT Survey – Participant Data Part 1 of 2, supra note 203 at 14, 28; SEAT Survey – Data Part 2 of 2, supra note 95 at 32, 45, 48-50; SEAT Survey – Participant Comments, supra note 95 at 316-50.
• Are deprived of the opportunities for tax-advantaged retirement savings and other investments;\textsuperscript{448}
• Cannot invest in most mutual funds available to others in their country of residences;\textsuperscript{449}
• Are stigmatized by overseas financial planners who prefer not to deal with the complications an overseas American presents;\textsuperscript{450} and
• Are stigmatized in their own families when their names are kept off titles to family assets located outside the United States.\textsuperscript{451}

In sum, and as Kant described, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system denies to overseas Americans the liberties that would allow them to live in accordance with the ends they freely chose. They cannot be “autonomous agents” with the ability to define their destinies independently. Instead, their financial as well as social destinies – which are their means of survival – are defined by the U.S. extraterritorial tax system. Neither the other residents of the countries where they live nor their fellow Americans living in the United States are subjected to the same limitations.

\textsuperscript{448} Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3 at 2281; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 304, 334-38. \textit{See also:} AARO Survey Article 6, supra note 314 at 3; AARO Survey Article 8, supra note 314 at 4; AARO Survey Article 10, supra note 314 at 4-9; DA Survey, supra note 437 at 5, 6, 13, 22, 27, 34, 35; SEAT Survey – Data Part 1 of 2, supra note 203 at 16-17; SEAT Survey – Data Part 2 of 2, supra note 95 at 53; SEAT Survey – Participant Comments, supra note 95 at 92-129. For a detailed account by one overseas American living in Australia see \textit{A Senior Citizen’s Story, LET’S FIX THE AUSTRALIA/US TAX TREATY!} (accessed June 24, 2023), http://fixthetaxtreaty.org/about/our-stories/a-senior-citizens-story/.

\textsuperscript{449} Snyder, Criminalization, supra note 3 at 2281; Snyder, Emigrant, supra note 3 at 304, 338-41. \textit{See also:} AARO Survey AARO Survey Article 6, supra note 314 at 1, 3; AARO Survey Article 8, supra note 314 at 3-4; AARO Survey Article 10, supra note 314 at 5-6; DA Survey, supra note 437 at 5, 13, 17, 20, 22, 23, 27, 31, 34-35; SEAT Survey – Data Part 1 of 2, supra note 203 at 14, 16-17; SEAT Survey – Participant Comments, supra note 95 at 92-141.

\textsuperscript{450} \textit{See} Robbie Lawther, \textit{Serving US Expats is a ‘Difficult Area for Advisers,’} \textit{International Adviser} (July 5, 2021), https://international-adviser.com/serving-us-expats-is-a-difficult-area-for-advisers/.

\textsuperscript{451} SEAT Survey – Participant Comments, supra note 95 at 270-286. \textit{See also} Snyder, \textit{I Feel Threatened – Part 3,} supra note 438.
D. Freedom from the Arbitrary Deprivation of One’s Nationality and the Right to Return to One’s Country

First Hannah Arendt and then United States Chief Justice Earl Warren described citizenship as “the right to have rights.” That is, Arendt explained, while simply being a human being should be enough to protect fundamental human rights, in reality it is not sufficient. Because the modern institution of the state is grounded on the principle of national and territorial sovereignty, human rights can only be protected through citizenship of a state. Warren further underscored the importance of citizenship when he wrote that denationalization is “a form of punishment more primitive than torture, for it destroys for the individual the political existence that was centuries in the development.”

Both Arendt and Warren were speaking in the context of statelessness, where the deprivation of citizenship results in the person not being a citizen of any country. Warren describes statelessness as “a condition deplored in the international community of democracies.” Statelessness is, indeed, a deplorable condition. Under any conditions losing a citizenship that one does not want to lose is deplorable, even if, by virtue of dual citizenship, it does not result in statelessness. Losing a citizenship means losing membership in a community; it means losing one’s rights in that community. The European Court of Human Rights has underscored the importance of nationality as an inherent part of a person’s social identity and as such determined that it is a protected element of private life.

An important element of citizenship is the right to enter and remain in the country of one’s citizenship. When a person is deprived of their citizenship, they are relegated to the status of foreigner, and as such are deprived of the right to enter that country as well as to remain on a long-term basis. As a foreigner, they may or may not be allowed to visit, and, if allowed, will be permitted to stay only for a temporary period.

454 Azar, supra note 452.
455 Id.
457 Id. at 102.
Freedom from the arbitrary deprivation of one’s nationality and the right to return to one’s country are enshrined in several human rights instruments. They state, in essence, “[n]o one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his nationality nor denied the right to change his nationality,”\textsuperscript{459} and “everyone [. . .] has the right to return to his country.”\textsuperscript{460}

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system causes the arbitrary deprivation of citizenship.\textsuperscript{461} An additional consequence of this loss of citizenship (among other consequences) is the loss of the right to return to one’s country. This loss is especially acute given the Reed Amendment, which seeks to bar entry into the United States of former U.S. citizens who are determined have renounced U.S. citizenship for the purpose of avoiding U.S. taxation.\textsuperscript{462}

The United Nations Human Rights Council has stated that the question of arbitrary deprivation of nationality does not comprise the loss of nationality “voluntarily” requested by the individual.\textsuperscript{463} As discussed above, most overseas Americans who renounce U.S. citizenship do so not because they no longer want to be U.S. citizens but because they see no other way to escape the penalizing nature of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system. Their renunciation is directly comparable to the constructive eviction of tenants and the constructive dismissal of employees. In each case, the victims are placed in untenable positions that leave them with no choice but to leave. Had their positions not been so punishing they would have wanted to stay.\textsuperscript{464}

As also discussed above, when they renounce U.S. citizenship; overseas Americans report feeling “angry” and “devastated,” and they “burst into tears” and vomit.\textsuperscript{465}

The involuntary nature of such renunciations is evident in this statement:

\textsuperscript{459} UDHR, supra note 416, at art 15(2).
\textsuperscript{460} The instruments are: (1) UDHR, supra note 416 at art 15(2); (2) ICCPR, supra note 416 at art 12(4); (3) ICERD, supra note 416 at art 5(d)(ii); (4) ICRMW, supra note 416 at art 8(2). As discussed supra text accompanying notes 416-418, the United States has signed the UDHR and has signed and ratified both the ICCPR and the ICERD.
\textsuperscript{461} See supra, notes 82-107 and accompanying text, discussing the forceable destruction of citizenship.
\textsuperscript{462} See supra, notes 92-96 and accompanying text, and Appendix A, infra note 608 and accompanying text. While U.S. authorities rarely seek to enforce the Reed Amendment, the law nevertheless has the effect of placing overseas Americans in positions of fear; either of renouncing, or, if they do renounce, of visiting the United States. See supra notes 92-96 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{464} See supra, notes 85, 107 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{465} Supra note 85 and accompanying text.
I felt betrayed by the US and will NEVER forgive them for forcing me to renounce my citizenship; it was part of who I am.

On the day of my renouncement I was in a fugue state, the only way for me to emotionally survive. Once there I just wanted to punch, kick, scream at the consular official, tell her how much I HATED the US government but obviously that was not the correct behaviour. I don’t think I really heard what she was saying, just put my hand up, signed my name, took a moment to stare right into her eyes and left.

Since that day I live with rage, sorrow, relief and confusion about who I am. I am not a REAL Canadian, I am no longer an American, it feels groundless. In reality it doesn’t really matter but yet it does somehow. Americans abroad have become refugees without refuge, US out to destroy them, home nations will not protect them. We are the citizenry of no one, it is actually terrifying and NO ONE CARES.466

Another former U.S. citizen wrote:

[R]enunciation [is] not one of those things you “get over” [. . .] I didn’t feel I had any choice. If I had a choice, I’d still be American.467

And another:

The day of renunciation, uncontrollable tears streamed down my face as I read the necessary oath. I feel that the United States obliged me to renounce through the imposition of inexplicably oppressive laws and I feel betrayed by my own country.468

These overseas Americans did not want to stop being U.S. citizens; this is evidenced in their sadness, their anger, their vomiting, and their tears. Their objective was to escape from the conditions that made it impossible for them to live normal lives outside the United States – to escape from the laws that were “out to destroy them” and from which the countries where they reside failed to protect them. They felt coerced to renounce – under patent duress – as the only path to safety available to them.

466 Snyder, I Feel Threatened – Part 2, supra note 437 at 75.
468 SEAT Survey – Participant Comments, supra note 95 at 539.
The Executive Branch acknowledges that the U.S. extraterritorial tax system compels many overseas Americans to renounce U.S. citizenship. This is evidenced in at least two ways:

- The issuance of the 2019 statement “Joint Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (FATCA) FAQ: Joint Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ) from the Department of the Treasury, the Department of State, the Internal Revenue Service, and the Social Security Administration on Obtaining Social Security Numbers, Expatriation, and Tax Implications.” \(^{469}\) In this lengthy title alone the United States recognizes that the U.S. extraterritorial tax system causes persons living overseas to “give up” \(^{470}\) U.S. citizenship – that there is a direct causal link between the tax system and their loss of U.S. citizenship.

- The IRS making available on its website a 2021 draft paper by a University of Michigan doctoral student entitled Citizenship and Taxes: Evaluating the Effects of the U.S. Tax System on Individuals’ Citizenship Decisions. \(^{471}\) The paper analyzes non-public data that the IRS provided to the author. The author’s conclusions include: “the recent increase in renunciations is mainly driven by those who have for many years lived abroad, rather than by individuals leaving the U.S., and […] these renunciations are primarily a response to increased compliance costs, not tax liabilities.” \(^{472}\)

The United Nations Human Rights Council has explained that even when statelessness is not at play, “[s]tates must weigh the consequences of loss or deprivation of nationality against the interest that it is seeking to protect, and consider alternative measures that could be imposed.” \(^{473}\)

The loss or deprivation of nationality that does not serve a legitimate aim

---

\(^{470}\) Id. at Question 10.

\(^{472}\) Id. at 1.

or is not proportionate is arbitrary and therefore prohibited. As discussed above, the U.S. extraterritorial tax system neither serves a legitimate aim nor is proportionate. Alternative means are available, notably the use of a tax system based solely upon residency and a departure tax applied to all persons, regardless of nationality, when they move out of the United States.

E. The Right of Self-Determination

It is not just individuals who are the victims of the human rights abuses that result from the U.S. extraterritorial tax system. Countries or, more precisely, “peoples” (explained below) as a collective are also victims.

This occurs when the decisions and policies of one country have an effect in another country such that the ability of the people of the second country to make their own decisions and apply their own policies within their country is limited.

This occurrence is particularly egregious when it results in the violation of the right of a subset of the group or the group as a whole to participate effectively in the economic and political life of the country.

Article 1 of the ICCPR enshrines this right:

1. All peoples have the right of self-determination. By virtue of that right they freely determine their political status and freely pursue their economic, social, and cultural development.
2. All peoples may, for their own ends, freely dispose of their natural wealth and resources without prejudice to any obligations arising out of international economic co-operation, based upon the principle of mutual benefit, and international law. In no case may a people be deprived of its own means of subsistence.

United Nations Human Rights Committee has explained that the right of self-determination is of particular importance because “its reali-

474 Id.
475 Supra notes 200-214, 308-357, and accompanying text.
476 See supra note 357 and accompanying text and infra notes 510-511 and accompanying text.
479 ICCPR, supra 416 at art 1.
zation is an essential condition for the effective guarantee and observance of individual human rights and for the promotion and strengthening of those rights.” In other words, in the absence of the right of self-determination, the other rights discussed in this paper would be more difficult to protect.

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates the right of other countries to self-determination. The system prevents the peoples of other countries (any country where overseas Americans live) from freely determining their economic and social development. For example, many countries where overseas Americans live have made policy decisions not to tax certain kinds of income, such as welfare benefits, pension contributions and/or proceeds, or capital gains on the sale of a residence, or to tax them at a reduced rate. When those countries make such a policy decision it is for their own policy reasons. For example, it could be because taxpayers have certain kinds of income at vulnerable times in their lives (unemployment, disability, old age, death of a spouse) and the country in question has determined that during those vulnerable periods it wants the taxpayer to have the full (or greater) benefit of that income. When the United States nevertheless taxes that income (which it normally does given that neither the foreign earned income exclusion nor foreign tax credits would apply), this directly overrides the policy determinations of the country where the overseas American lives and deprives residents (who are often also citizens) of that country of a portion of their means of subsistence.

In addition, the policies of many countries encourage spouses and other family members to hold joint title to family assets. This facilitates estate planning as well as access to family assets upon the death of a spouse or other family member. The U.S. extraterritorial tax system

---

481 See, e.g., Alpert, Investing with One Hand, supra note 3 (discussing Australian superannuation and other investments). France does not tax capital gains with respect to the sale of a primary residence; when a U.S. citizen sells their home in France, any capital gains are fully taxable by the United States. See, e.g., French Property Taxes for Non-Residents and Expats, GREENBACK EXPAT TAX SERVICES (Dec. 4, 2021), https://www.greenbacktaxservices.com/blog/french-property-taxes-non-residents-expats/.

483 See supra notes 181-189 and accompanying text.
causes the economic ostracization of overseas Americans from their families. That is, some overseas Americans are denied title to family assets located outside the United States to shield the assets from U.S. capital gains tax. This does not just leave those overseas Americans financially vulnerable; it also thwarts both the economic and social development of those countries in the manner their lawmakers intended.

Finally, because foreign pension plans and other foreign investments are subject to heavy U.S. tax penalties, many overseas Americans find themselves unable to plan or save effectively for their retirement. The result is the increased probability that when they retire, they will not have sufficient financial resources and will become public charges in the countries where they live. Further, these tax penalties encourage overseas Americans to move capital out of the country where they live to the United States. Both results thwart the economic development of the country in the manner its policymakers intended.

It is in these manners that the U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates both Article 1(1) and Article 1(2) of the ICCPR. It does this not only by infringing upon the free pursuit of the economic and social development of those countries but also by depriving residents of those countries of their means of subsistence.

V. Adoption of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights

The Taxpayer Bill of Rights (TBOR) was enacted in 2015, more than 90 years after Cook. This enactment did not establish new rights for U.S. taxpayers; rather, it combined existing rights found in various tax laws, regulations, and policies and put them in one place, making them easier to identify.

The creation of the TBOR is credited principally to Nina Olson, the former National Taxpayer Advocate. She is often quoted as saying, “[a]t their core, taxpayer rights are human rights.”

The direct enforceability of the TBOR is in question. Nevertheless, an analysis of how the United States violates the TBOR is important.

484 See, e.g., Snyder, I Feel Threatened—Part 3, supra note 438.
485 Supra notes 448-449 and accompanying text.
487 Andrew R. Roberson, The Taxpayer Bill of Rights: A Primer and Thoughts on Things to Come, 38 ABA TAX TIMES (Spring 2018), https://www.americanbar.org/groups/taxation/publications/abattaxtimes_home/18may/18may-pbm-roberston-the-taxpayer-bill-of-rights/because, like an analysis of international human rights instruments,\textsuperscript{490} a TBOR analysis further exposes the problems and injustices of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system— in particular as regards IRS administration— and further underscores the immorality of the system. In addition, the analysis supports the demonstration that, in a discussion of equal protection, the United States has neither a compelling nor a legitimate interest in continuing the U.S. extraterritorial tax system.\textsuperscript{491}
488 Id.

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates the TBOR in both (A) its substance, and (B) its failed administration.

A. The Substance of the U.S. Extraterritorial Tax System Violates TBOR

The TBOR includes the Right to a Fair and Just Tax System. According to this Right, taxpayers “have the right to expect the tax system to consider facts and circumstances that might affect their underlying liabilities, ability to pay, or ability to provide information timely.”\textsuperscript{492}

The simple fact of the United States imposing its tax rules on persons who live overseas constitutes a fundamental violation of this right. This is because the U.S. tax system applies the exact same rules regardless of the taxpayer’s residence; in doing so it fails to consider that the circumstances of persons living overseas are entirely different from those of persons living in the United States and from other overseas Americans living in other countries. The U.S. tax rules heavily penalize non-U.S. investments, non-U.S. retirement plans, non-U.S. banks accounts, non-U.S. businesses, and non-U.S. unearned income.\textsuperscript{494} It is relatively easy for most U.S. residents to avoid these.\textsuperscript{495} For Americans living overseas on a long-term basis, it is impossible. Neither the content nor the application of U.S. tax rules considers the dramatic differences in circumstances that affect the overseas American’s underlying liabilities, ability to pay, or ability to provide information timely. The U.S. extraterritorial tax sys-

\textsuperscript{490} Supra text accompanying notes 409-410.
\textsuperscript{491} Supra text accompanying notes 165-199, 308-357.
\textsuperscript{492} Taxpayer Bill of Rights, supra note 486.
\textsuperscript{493} The choice of the term “non-U.S.” rather than “foreign” is deliberate. It is intended to emphasize that these non-U.S. investments, retirement plans, bank accounts, businesses, and unearned income are domestic – not foreign – for the overseas American.
\textsuperscript{494} See supra notes 447-451 and accompanying text and Table 5. See also Richardson, More Punitive, supra note 3; Jacqueline Bugnion, Concerns About the Taxation of Americans Resident Abroad, Tax Notes (Aug. 24, 2015), 861-66, https://adcsovereignty.files.wordpress.com/2015/09/bugnion-08-24-15.pdf.
\textsuperscript{495} A notable exception is immigrants to the United States, to the extent they retain assets located in their countries of origin and/or they inherit assets located in their country of origin. See generally Oei, supra note 11.
tem expects overseas Americans to live their lives as if they were in the United States; this is impossible for them to do. 496

B. The Failed Administration of the U.S. Extraterritorial Tax System Violates TBOR

Without question there are many failures in the IRS’s administration of the domestic tax system. They pale, however, in comparison to the failures in the IRS’s administration of the extraterritorial tax system. These multiple failures result in multiple violations of the TBOR, as summarized in Table 6. 497 Further, taken as a whole, the IRS’s discriminatory treatment of overseas Americans as compared to U.S. residents constitutes a violation of the Right to a Fair and Just Tax System.

496 This is impossible because other countries have their own rules regarding employment, business organization, asset ownership, investment, and taxation that all residents must respect regardless of citizenship. For an explanation specially with respect to Americans living in France, see Snyder, Emigrant, infra note 3 at 306 n.22. Indeed, it is in ignoring the rules of other countries that the U.S. extraterritorial tax system violates their sovereignty. See id. at 326–44. For an additional discussion of why this is impossible, see Oei, supra note 11 at 698-700.

497 For a detailed discussion of these failures, see Snyder et al.,Mission Impossible, supra note 94. To understand the longstanding nature of these failures, see a 1979 report describing many of the same problems. Report Submitted by American Citizens Abroad: “Laws and Regulations of the United States That Discriminate Against American Citizens Living Abroad, or That Make Overseas American Noncompetitive in the Markets of the World, contained as Appendix B to U.S. Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, Appendix A, infra note 579 at 89-93.
TABLE 6: COMPARISON OF IRS SERVICES FOR U.S. RESIDENTS AND OVERSEAS AMERICANS AND RESULTING VIOLATIONS OF THE TAXPAYER BILL OF RIGHTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>IRS Service</th>
<th>Adapted for U.S. Residents</th>
<th>Adapted for Overseas Americans</th>
<th>Taxpayer Bill of Rights Violations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>In-person assistance</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>-Right to be informed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Toll-free telephoning</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>-Right to be informed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to pay no more than correct amount of tax</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Knowledgeable IRS agents</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>-Right to be informed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Online accounts</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>-Right to be informed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>E-filing</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>Sometimes</td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to pay no more than correct amount of tax</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Timely delivery of postal mail</td>
<td>Mostly</td>
<td>Severe delays are common</td>
<td>-Right to be informed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to finality</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Use of other languages</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>-Right to be informed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Explanations of tax obligations</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>Limited</td>
<td>-Right to be informed</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>IRS Service</th>
<th>Adapted for U.S. Residents</th>
<th>Adapted for Overseas Americans</th>
<th>Taxpayer Bill of Rights Violations</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Making payments to the IRS</td>
<td>Some problems</td>
<td>Widespread problems, including high costs</td>
<td>-Right to quality service -Right to pay no more than correct amount of tax</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Receiving payments from the IRS</td>
<td>Some problems</td>
<td>Widespread problems, including high costs</td>
<td>-Right to quality service -Right to pay no more than correct amount of tax</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Third-party assistance</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>Limited and at high cost</td>
<td>-Right to be informed -Right to quality service -Right to retain representation</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Low-income taxpayer clinic (LITC)</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>-Right to retain representation499</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IRS internal organization</td>
<td>Yes</td>
<td>No</td>
<td>-Right to quality service</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CONCLUSION: TAXING IN RESPECT OF RIGHTS

_Cook_ holds that the federal government has the power to tax overseas Americans based upon their worldwide income. It is a myth, however, that _Cook_ allows the government to tax overseas Americans under any conditions and without any regard for the effects the policies have. It is a myth that _Cook_ allows the federal government to tax overseas Americans in manners that violate their fundamental rights.

This paper demonstrates that the U.S. extraterritorial tax system as it exists today violates multiple fundamental rights:

- Protection against the forcible destruction of citizenship;500
- Equal protection under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments;501

---

499 The IRS website explains that for taxpayers with income below a specified level, the right to retain representation include access to representation by an LITC for free or a minimal fee. LITCs, all of which are located in the United States, are partially funded by the IRS. IRS, _Taxpayer Bill of Rights 9: The Right to Retain Representation_ (updated Nov. 16, 2022), https://www.irs.gov/newsroom/taxpayer-bill-of-rights-9#:~:text=Taxpayers%20have%20the%20right%20to,if%20they%20cannot%20afford%20representation.

500 _Supra_ notes 82-107 and accompanying text.

501 _Supra_ notes 108-407 and accompanying text.
• The right to leave one’s country;\textsuperscript{502}
• The right to work, free choice of work, and freedom from discrimination in work;\textsuperscript{503}
• Equality in dignity and rights;\textsuperscript{504}
• Freedom from the arbitrary deprivation of nationality and the right to return to one’s country;\textsuperscript{505}
• Right of self-determination,\textsuperscript{506} and
• Multiple elements of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights (the right to a fair and just tax system; the right to be informed; the right to quality service; the right to pay no more than the correct amount of tax; the right to finality; and the right to retain representation).\textsuperscript{507}

The U.S. extraterritorial tax system is unique in the world; no other country taxes its overseas citizens in a comparable manner.\textsuperscript{508} Other countries offer to the United States a multitude of examples of systems that further the legitimate purpose of preventing tax abuse while also respecting fundamental rights.

Drawing from those examples, the right system for the United States would feature the following elements:\textsuperscript{509}

• Taxation and citizenship are entirely dissociated; citizenship bears no relevancy to taxation. Instead, income taxation is based upon – and only upon –

\textsuperscript{502} Supra notes 412-429 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{503} Supra notes 430-437 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{504} Supra notes 441-451 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{505} Supra notes 452-476 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{506} Supra notes 478-485 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{507} Supra notes 486-499 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{508} Three other countries in the world – Eritrea, Myanmar, and Hungary – tax the foreign income of their nonresident citizens on an ongoing basis. These countries do so in manners that are different and considerably more limited as compared to the United States. Eritrea taxes the foreign income of its nonresident citizens at a flat rate of 2\%. See DSP-groep BV & Tilburg School of Humanities, Department of Culture Studies, The 2\% Tax for Eritreans in the Diaspora: Facts, Figures and Experiences in Seven European Countries (June, 2017), https://eritreahub.org/wp-content/uploads/2020/10/The_2_Tax_for_Eritreans_in_the_diaspora.pdf [https://perma.cc/RJT2-CBKH] (exposing multiple problems with the legality of Eritrea’s diaspora tax as well as with its enforcement). Myanmar taxes the non-salary income of its nonresident citizens at a reduced flat rate of 10\%. See PwC, Myanmar: Individual - Taxes on Personal Income (last reviewed Mar. 1, 2023), https://taxsummaries.pwc.com/myanmar/individual/taxes-on-personal-income [https://perma.cc/H4QH-6ZC7]. Hungary taxes the income of its nonresident citizens only if they (1) are not dual citizens, and (2) live in a country with which Hungary does not have a tax treaty. EY, World Wide Personal Tax and Immigration Guide 2021–22, at 622-28 (2022), https://www.ey.com/en_gl/tax-guides/worldwide-personal-tax-and-immigration-guide [https://perma.cc/N3KF-JY5D].
residence and source. Persons who both are not residents (again, regardless of citizenship) of the United States and are tax residents of another country, have no tax obligations to the United States, including no filing or reporting obligations, except with respect to any U.S.-source income they may have.

- If there is an exit (or departure) tax, it is imposed at the time a person ceases to be a resident. Again, citizenship status is not relevant. The departing taxpayer may choose either to pay the applicable tax at the time of departure or to defer payment until the asset in question is sold.\textsuperscript{510} Some assets are exempt from the departure tax, such as retirement plans/savings and certain types of real estate and business property;\textsuperscript{511}

- The United States joins the OECD’s Common Reporting Standards (CRS)\textsuperscript{512} and does not impose duplicative reporting requirements for offshore financial accounts. Only accounts that are truly offshore (not in the taxpayer’s country of residence) are reportable, and they are reportable only to the taxpayer’s country of residence.

It is time to end the U.S. extraterritorial tax system. The system is both irrational and immoral:\textsuperscript{513} it singles out overseas Americans based upon their nationality and imposes upon them legal burdens that are not placed upon any other category of persons and that do not correspond to their individual responsibility.

\textsuperscript{511} Canada exempts from its departure tax: (i) retirement and related plans; (ii) Canadian business property (including inventory) if the business is carried on through a permanent establishment in Canada; (iii) real estate located in Canada, and (iv) real estate located outside Canada that was acquired prior to the last time the taxpayer became a resident of Canada. See Government of Canada, \textit{Dispositions of Property} (updated Jan. 24, 2023), https://www.canada.ca/en/revenue-agency/services/tax/international-non-residents/individuals-leaving-entering-canada-non-residents/dispositions-property.html.

\textsuperscript{512} See supra notes 323-325 and accompanying text.

\textsuperscript{513} As specifically regards the immorality of the U.S. extraterritorial tax system, see supra text accompanying notes 409-410, 489-491.
APPENDIX A: Evolution of the U.S. Extraterritorial Tax System, of U.S. Citizenship, and of Equal Protection

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1855</td>
<td></td>
<td>Citizenship Act of 1855: Established the U.S. citizenship of: (1) persons born outside the United States whose father was a U.S. citizen at time of birth, except if father never resided in the United States; and (2) women who are or shall be married to a U.S. citizen.514</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1861-62</td>
<td>Revenue Acts of 1861 and 1862: Established the first federal income tax. Subjected “every person residing in the United States” (regardless of citizenship) to taxation on all income, regardless of source, at a rate of 3% (under the Revenue Act of 1862 the rate of 5% applied to income over $10,000).515 Income subject to taxation included income from employment, profession, trade or vocation, as well as from property, rents, interest, and dividends. Subjected “any citizen of the United States resid-</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

514 Citizenship Act of 1855, 10 Stat. 604.
515 Under the Revenue Act of 1861, the rate of 3% applied to income over $800 and a lower rate of 1.5% applied to interest upon treasury notes or other securities of the United States. Revenue Act of 1861, § 49, 12 Stat. 292, 309. Under the Revenue Act of 1862, the rate of 3% applied to income over $600. Revenue Act of 1862, § 90, 12 Stat. 432, 473.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>“any citizen of the United States residing abroad” to include both worldwide income as well as income from employment, profession, trade, or vocation.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1864</td>
<td>Revenue Act of 1864:</td>
<td>14th Amendment: Established that all persons born or naturalized in the United States are U.S. citizens. Requires a state to provide to all persons within its jurisdiction equal protection of the laws.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Expatriation Act of 1868:</td>
<td>(1) Proclaimed that all persons have the right to expatriate, and (2) provided that naturalized citizens are entitled to the same protections of person and property as native-born citizens.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1868</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1871</td>
<td>Revenue Act of 1864 allowed to expire.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

516 Revenue Act of 1861, § 49, 12 Stat. at 309; Revenue Act of 1862, § 90, 12 Stat. at 473. Under the Revenue Act of 1861 a lower rate of 1.5% applied to interest upon treasury notes or other securities of the United States. Revenue Act of 1861 § 49, 12 Stat. at 309.

518 U.S. CONST. amend XIV.

519 Expatriation Act of 1868, Preamble, 15 Stat. 223

520 Expatriation Act of 1868, § 2, 15 Stat. at 224.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1895</td>
<td>Pollock v. Farmers' Loan &amp; Trust Company: Income tax of the Wilson-Gorman Tariff Act is declared unconstitutional.</td>
<td></td>
<td>Plessy v. Ferguson: Court held that racial segregation on railroad cars was permissible under the &quot;separate but equal&quot; doctrine. Court stated that the only limits upon the legislature in the exercise of its police power were that the laws be enacted &quot;in good faith for the promotion for the public good, and not for the annoyance or oppression of a particular class.&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1896</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1907</td>
<td>Expatriation Act of 1907: Established loss of U.S. citizenship for: (1) persons who acquire citizenship of another country by naturalization; (2) naturalized U.S. citizens who either (i) reside in originating country for more than 2 years, or (ii) reside in</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

523 157 U.S. 429 (1895).
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>any other country for more than 5 years; (3) women who marry a non-citizen (she assumes his citizenship until the end of the marriage); (4) children born and residing overseas who, upon their 18th birthday, do not record at a U.S. consulate their intention to reside in United States and retain U.S. citizenship, and take an oath of allegiance to the United States.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1913 16th Amendment: Established Congress’s right to impose federal income taxation.\(^526\)
Underwood-Simmons Tariff Act of 1913: Subjected to federal income taxation these three groups: (i) “every citizen of the United States, whether residing at home or abroad,” (ii) “every person residing in the United States, though not a citizen thereof,” and (iii) “persons residing elsewhere.”\(^527\)
Regulations 33 (1914): Repeated this description of the three groups. Persons in groups (i) and (ii) are subject to taxation on the basis on their “net income arising or accruing from all sources.” Persons in group (iii)...

---

\(^{526}\) U.S. Const. amend XVI.
\(^{527}\) Underwood-Simmons Tariff Act of 1913 (also referred to as Revenue Act of 1913), Pub. L. No. 63-16, § II(A); 38 Stat. 114, 166.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1918</td>
<td>Revenue Act of 1918: Imposed federal income taxation on every “individual,” regardless of residence or citizenship. Specified that nonresident aliens are subject to taxation only with respect to U.S.-source income.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1919</td>
<td>Regulations 45: First regulatory definition of “citizen” for the purpose of establishing the persons liable to tax. Described “persons liable to tax” as “every citizen of the United States, wherever resident […]. It makes no difference that he may own no assets within the United States and may receive no income from sources within the United States. Every resident alien is liable to tax, even though his income is wholly from sources outside the United States. Every nonresident alien individual is liable to the tax on this income from sources within the United States.” Defined “citizen” as: “Every person born in the United States subject to its jurisdiction, or naturalized in the United States, is a citizen. When any naturalized citizen has left the United States and resided for two years in the foreign country from which he came, or for five years in any other foreign country, he is presumed to have lost his American citizenship; but this presumption does not apply to residence abroad while the United States is at war. An Italian, who has come to the United States as an alien, or who has ever been an alien, but has been admitted into the United States as a citizen, is a citizen.”</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

529 Revenue Act of 1918, Pub. L. No. 65-254, § 210, § 213(c); 40 Stat. 1057, 1062, 1066.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td></td>
<td>United States and filed his declaration of intention of becoming a citizen, but who has not yet received his final citizenship papers, is an alien. A Swede who, after having come to the United States, and become naturalized here, returned to Sweden and resided there for two years prior to April 6, 1917, is presumed to be once more an alien. On the other hand, an individual born in the United States subject to its jurisdiction, of either citizen or alien parents, who has long since moved to a foreign country and established a domicile there, but who has never been naturalized in or taken an oath of allegiance to that or any other foreign country, is still a citizen of the United States.531</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td></td>
<td>Married Women’s Independent Nationality Act: Partially reversed the Expatriation Act of 1907 by allowing a woman residing in the United States who married a non-U.S. citizen to keep U.S. citizenship. However, if she resided for two years in the country where her husband is a citizen, or for five years in any other country, the presumption that she lost U.S. citizenship remained.532</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Cook v. Tait:</td>
<td>Held that the government’s power to tax is not dependent upon the situs of the property or the domicile of the citizen, but upon “his relation as a citizen to the United States and the relation of”</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

531 Id., art. 4 at 12.
532 Married Women’s Independent Nationality Act (also referred to as the Cable Act), Pub. L. No. 67-346, § 3, 42 Stat. 1021, 1022 (1922). See Herzog, supra note 525 at 44.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>the latter to him as a citizen.” This is because government, by its very nature, benefits the citizen and his property wherever found, and therefore has the power to make the benefit complete.”</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1926</td>
<td>Revenue Act of 1926: Introduction of the Foreign Earned Income Exclusion (FEIE). Applied to persons residing outside the United States for at least six months. Applied to all income earned outside the United States but not to any unearned income, such as from investments.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Regulations 86: Modified the definition of “citizen” for the purpose of establishing the persons liable to tax, to read as follows: “Every person born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to its jurisdiction, is a citizen. When any naturalized citizen has left the United States and resided for two years in the foreign country from which he came, or for five years in any other foreign country, it is presumed that he has ceased to be an American citizen. This presumption does not apply, however, to residence abroad while the United States was at war, nor does it apply in the case of individuals born in the United States subject to its jurisdiction. However, even though an individual born in the United States, subject to its jurisdiction, of either citizen or alien parents, resided in a foreign country for a number of years, he would still be a citizen of the United States, unless he had become naturalized in, or taken an oath of allegiance to, the foreign country of residence or some other foreign country.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

533 265 U.S. 47, 56 (1924). See supra notes 45, 47 and accompanying text.
535 Supra note 531 and accompanying text.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1938</td>
<td></td>
<td>United States v. Carolene Products Company: This case’s Footnote 4 introduced the principle of levels of scrutiny, including strict scrutiny, by a court when considering the constitutionality of a law. Footnote 4 established the need for increased scrutiny of laws that affect certain groups, notably groups subject to prejudice as “discreet and insular minorities,” rendering them politically powerless.537</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1940</td>
<td>Nationality Act of 1940: Extensive collection of provisions describing conditions for birth right citizenship and for naturalization as well as for loss of U.S. citizenship. The Act codified the fluid nature of U.S. citizenship as something one could have, lose, and re-gain depending upon multiple life circumstances, such as: as a naturalized citizen, residing outside the United States for an extended period; reaching 16 years of age while residing outside the United States; returning to the United States, etc.538 A long list of expatriating acts included: naturalization in another</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

536 Bureau of Internal Revenue, Regulations 86 Relating to the Income Tax under the Revenue Act of 1934, art. 11-3 at 3-4 (1935).
537 304 U.S. 144, 152 (1938). See supra notes 118-119 and accompanying text.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1943</td>
<td></td>
<td>country; oath of allegiance to another country; voting in a foreign election; serving in the armed forces of another country; and desertion of the U.S. military.</td>
<td>Hirabayashi v. United States Court stated that “Distinctions between citizens solely because of their ancestry are, by their very, nature odious to a free people whose institutions are founded upon the doctrine of equality.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948</td>
<td></td>
<td>Universal Declaration of Human Rights: Contains the rights: (i) to leave any country, including one’s own, (ii) to return to one’s country; (iii) to a nationality; (iv) to not be arbitrarily deprived of nationality; and (v) to change nationality.</td>
<td>Oyama v. California: Court held that a state may not discriminate based on country of origin absent “compelling justification.”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1950</td>
<td>Treasury Decision 5815: Again modified the definition of “citizen” for the purpose of establishing the persons liable to tax, to read as follows: “Every person born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to its jurisdiction, is a citizen. For rules governing the expatriation of citizens by birth and naturalized citizens; see sections 401-</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

539 Id. at §§ 401-404, 54 Stat. 1168-70. See also Alan G. James, Expatriation in the United States: Precept and Practice Today and Yesterday 27 SAN DIEGO L. REV. 853, 875-76 (1990).
540 320 U.S. 81, 100 (1943). See supra notes 129-130 and accompanying text.
543 Supra note 536 and accompanying text.
Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952:
In a manner similar to the Nationality Act of 1940, the 1952 Act also contained an extensive collection of provisions describing conditions for birth right citizenship and for naturalization as well as for loss of U.S. citizenship. The Act confirmed the fluid nature of U.S. citizenship and the ease with which U.S. citizenship could be lost, such as by: the expatriation of a parent; naturalizing in another country; voting in a foreign election; as a naturalized U.S. citizen, living outside the United States for an extended period of time; serving in the armed forces of another country; desertion of the U.S. military; and being a dual national from birth who, within three years of their 22nd birthday, does not return to live in the United States.\textsuperscript{545}\textsuperscript{545} The Act ended for women the automatic loss of U.S. citizenship by reason of marriage to an alien and residence overseas.\textsuperscript{546}\textsuperscript{546}

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952. In a manner similar to the Nationality Act of 1940, the 1952 Act also contained an extensive collection of provisions describing conditions for birth right citizenship and for naturalization as well as for loss of U.S. citizenship. The Act confirmed the fluid nature of U.S. citizenship and the ease with which U.S. citizenship could be lost, such as by: the expatriation of a parent; naturalizing in another country; voting in a foreign election; as a naturalized U.S. citizen, living outside the United States for an extended period of time; serving in the armed forces of another country; desertion of the U.S. military; and being a dual national from birth who, within three years of their 22nd birthday, does not return to live in the United States.\textsuperscript{545}\textsuperscript{545} The Act ended for women the automatic loss of U.S. citizenship by reason of marriage to an alien and residence overseas.\textsuperscript{546}\textsuperscript{546}</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

\textsuperscript{546} Id. at § 357, 66 Stat. at 272.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1953-54</td>
<td>Regulations 118: Again modified the definition of &quot;citizen&quot; for the purpose of establishing the persons liable to tax, to read as follows: &quot;Every person born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to its jurisdiction, is a citizen. For rules governing the expatriation of citizens by birth and naturalized citizens, see sections 349 to 357, inclusive, of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 1952 (8 U.S.C. 1481-1489). A foreigner who has filed his declaration of intention of becoming a citizen but who has not yet been admitted to citizenship by a final order of a naturalization court is an alien.&quot;</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

547 Supra note 549 and accompanying text.
548 Regulations 118, 26 C.F.R. Sec. 39.11-3 (1953); See also T.D. 6161, 1956-1 C.B. 7, 13 (1956).

Hernandez v. Texas (1954): Court held that “community prejudices are not static, and, from time to time, other differences from the community norm may define other groups which need [equal] protection.”

Bolling v. Sharpe (1954): Court held that not just state, but also federal laws must comply with the 14th Amendment’s equal protection clause.

1958 | Trop v. Dulles: Soldier was convicted of desertion. His later application for a passport was denied on the grounds that under the Nationality Act of 1940 he had lost his citizenship due to desertion. Court ruled the relevant section of the Nationality Act of 1940 violated the 8th Amendment as a cruel and unusual punishment. In this decision, Chief Justice Earl Warren described the importance of citizenship for all other rights, writing: “[With] denationalization […] there may be involved no physical mistreatment, no primitive torture. There is instead null

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>the total destruction of the individual’s status in organized society. It is a form of punishment more primitive than torture, for it destroys for the individual the political existence that was centuries in the development. The punishment strips the citizen of his status in the national and international political community […] the expatriate has lost the right to have rights.551</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1959</td>
<td>Circular No. A-25: Enshrined the principle that the federal government must charge a fee for all services which “convey special benefits to recipients above and beyond those accruing to the public at large.” The fee charged must recover the full cost to the federal government of rendering that service.552 In accordance with this Circular and its 1993 revision,553 all U.S. citizen services offered by U.S. consulates are funded solely by user fees and not by taxation.554 This includes charging “market prices” when the government is not acting in its capacity as sovereign.555</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1962</td>
<td>Revenue Act of 1962: (1) CFCs: First effort to use income tax laws to limit investment overseas. Introduced Subpart F to IRC. Expanded the definition of “Controlled Foreign Corporation” (CFC) to include not just</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

553 Office of Management and Budget, Circular No. A-25 Revised (Transmittal Memorandum No. 1) (July 8, 1993).
554 Consular Services for Americans, Ass’n Of Amer. Resident Overseas (Nov. 13, 2019), https://www.aaro.org/events/event-reports/798-consular-services-for-americans [https://perma.cc/4PWK-5XL7].
corporate shareholders of foreign companies but also individuals. Introduced restrictions on U.S. shareholders’ ability to defer taxes on certain types of CFC income by requiring the income to be included in the U.S. shareholders’ current-year taxable incomes regardless of repatriation to the United States. Subjected certain CFC income to taxation as ordinary income rather than capital gains.556

(2) Foreign trusts: First requirements for filing of informational returns for foreign trusts.557 Several non-U.S. pension/retirement plans qualify as “foreign trusts.”558

(3) FEIE: Introduction of a cap on the amount of earned income that can qualify under the FEIE.559

---

557 Revenue Act of 1962 §§ 7(f)-(g), 76 Stat. at 988-89 (adding to the Code new § 6048 (requirement to file) and § 6677 (penalties for failure to file)).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1964</td>
<td></td>
<td>Schneider v. Rusk:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>This case concerned a woman who moved from Germany to the United States as a child and became a naturalized U.S. citizen along with her parents, and who, as an adult, moved back to Germany.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>The court rejected the claim of the U.S. Department of State that she had lost her U.S. citizenship because she had returned to live in her country of origin for an extended period. The court held that the law cannot create a second class of citizens: that since no rule deprived natural-born Americans of their citizenship because of extended or permanent residence overseas, it was unconstitutionally discriminatory and a violation of the equal protection component of the 5th Amendment due process clause to apply such a rule only to naturalized citizens.560</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1965</td>
<td>The IRS established its first toll-free telephone site.561</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>As of 2022 – 57 years later – toll-free access is available to all persons in the United States but remains unavailable outside the United States.562</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1966</td>
<td>Foreign Investors Tax Act:</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>For non-resident aliens: (1) elimination of taxation on interest on bank deposits, coupon payments from U.S. government debt, and portfolio</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

562 See Snyder et al., Mission Impossible, supra note 94 at 1832. See also supra text accompanying notes 191, 497-499. In 2019 the Taxpayer Advocacy Panel (TAP) asked the IRS to make toll-free services available to overseas taxpayers. The IRS responded that “it would be nice” to provide it but that it would “need to investigate technical viability.” Id. The 2019 Taxpayer First Act offered to the IRS the opportunity to plan and request the resources to better serve international taxpayers, including toll-free services. The IRS’s 2021 Taxpayer First Act Report to Congress contained no mention of extending toll-free services to international taxpayers. See Snyder et al., Mission Impossible, supra note 94 at 1845.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1967</td>
<td>interest paid by U.S. domestic corporations became tax-free; and (2) establishment of additional tax benefits for other kinds of U.S. investments. The result was to establish the United States as a tax haven for foreign investment. Expatriation: Introduction of an expatriation tax for former U.S. citizens. Tax applied if motive for expatriation was tax avoidance.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1970</td>
<td>Bank Secrecy Act: Financial Account Reporting: Adoption of FBAR, requiring that all the financial accounts held with any foreign financial institutions in</td>
<td>Afroyim v. Rusk: This case concerned a naturalized U.S. citizen who moved to Israel, where he voted in an election. The U.S. Department of State later refused to renew his U.S. passport, claiming he had lost his U.S. citizenship because of his participation in a foreign election. The Court rejected this claim, holding that the 14th Amendment protects every citizen against a “congressional forcible destruction of his citizenship,” and that every citizen has the right to remain a citizen “unless he voluntarily relinquishes that citizenship.” This landmark case had the result of considerably increasing the number of U.S. citizens living overseas because they no longer lost U.S. citizenship by operation of law.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

565 See Peter J. Spiro, AT HOME IN TWO COUNTRIES: THE PAST AND FUTURE OF DUAL CITIZENSHIP, 6, 56-58 (2016). See also supra notes 79-81 and accompanying text.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 1971 | cumulative amount of $10,000 or more be reported annually to FinCEN.566 | | Graham v. Richardson:
Court held that classifications based on alienage, like those based upon nationality or race, are inherently suspect and subject to close judicial scrutiny. Aliens as a class are a “prime” example of a “discrete and insular” minority as referenced in United States v. Caroene Products (1938) and for whom heightened judicial solicitude is appropriate.567 |
| 1973 | | Frontiero v. Richardson:
Court stated that: (1) national origin is an “immutable characteristic determined solely by the accident of birth;” and (2) classifications based upon national origin are inherently suspect and must be subjected to strict judicial scrutiny.568
Department of Agriculture v. Moreno:
Court held “if the constitutional conception of ‘equal protection of the laws’ means anything, |

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1974</td>
<td>Federal Register 1974: Modified Regulations 118’s\textsuperscript{570} definition of “citizen” for the purpose of establishing the persons liable to tax, to read as follows: “Every person born or naturalized in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction is a citizen. For other rules governing the acquisition of citizenship, see chapters 1 and 2 of title III of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1401-1459). For rules governing loss of citizenship, see sections 349 to 357, inclusive, of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1481-1489), \textit{Schneider v. Rusk}, (1964) 377 U.S. 163, and Rev. Rul. 70-506, C.B. 1970-2, 1. For rules pertaining to persons who are nationals but not citizens at birth, e.g., a person born in American Samoa, see section 308 of such Act (8 U.S.C. 1408). For special rules applicable to certain expatriates who have lost citizenship with a principal purpose of avoiding certain taxes, see section 877. A foreigner who has filed his declaration of intention of becoming a citizen but who has not yet been admitted to citizenship by a final order of a naturalization court is an alien.”\textsuperscript{571}</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1975</td>
<td>Tax Reduction Act of 1975: CFCs: Increased the taxation of shareholders of</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

\textsuperscript{570} \textit{Supra} note 548 and accompanying text.
\textsuperscript{571} 39 Fed. Reg. 44210, 44216 (Dec. 23, 1974).
\textsuperscript{572} \textit{See} 26 CFR § 1.1-1(c).
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 1976     | Tax Reform Act of 1976: Foreign trusts: Reduced possibilities for tax deferral with respect to contributions to a foreign trust. Imposed penalizing taxation on income within the trust and on distributions. Instituted trust reporting obligations on the grantor.

Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC): First enactment of EITC; eligibility is limited to persons residing in the United States.

Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Year 1979; Amended 22 U.S.C § 1731 to include: “The Congress finds that – (1) United States citizens |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1979</td>
<td>Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978:</td>
<td>and for a minimum number of years.578</td>
<td>living abroad should be provided fair and equitable treatment by the United States Government with regard to taxation, citizenship of progeny, veterans’ benefits, voting rights, Social Security benefits, and other obligations, rights, and benefits; and (2) such fair and equitable treatment would be facilitated by a periodic review of statutes and regulations affecting Americans living abroad.579</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>FEIE: Eliminated the FEIE for most Americans living overseas, replacing it with a complex series of deductions intended to compensate for excessive costs of living.577</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1981</td>
<td>Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981: FEIE: Reinstated the FEIE with a cap on the amount of earned income that can qualify. Again excluded unearned income, and notably revenue from investments and non-U.S. pension income.</td>
<td>the Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Year 1979)§580 to include: “United States statutes and regulations should be designed so as not to create competitive disadvantage for individual American citizens living abroad or working in international markets.”§581</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1982</td>
<td></td>
<td>Department of State Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1982 and 1983: Repealed as “obsolete”383 the provisions of 22 U.S.C § 1731 relating to the fair and equitable treatment of United States citizens living abroad384 and the design of laws and regulations so as to not create competitive disad-</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

580 Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Year 1979 at § 611.
584 Supra note 579 and accompanying text.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1983</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Department of State Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 1984 and 1985: Formalized the requirement that U.S. citizens evacuated from another country are required to reimburse the U.S. Department of State “to the maximum extent practicable.”[^586]</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1985</td>
<td>50 Federal Register 30162: CFCs: Replaced Form 2952 with Form 5471. Form 5471 significantly increased the amount of information required to be reported for each CFC.[^587]</td>
<td>City of Cleburne v. Cleburne Living Center: Court invalidated a requirement for a special zoning permit for a proposed group home for the cognitively disabled because the requirement for the permit was based upon animus: “requiring the permit [rests] upon an irrational prejudice against the mentally retarded.”[^588]</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

[^585]: Supra note 581 and accompanying text.
[^587]: Notably, Form 5471 included an expanded income statement schedule, a cost of goods sold schedule, a foreign taxes paid schedule, a balance sheet schedule, and earnings and profit analysis schedules. See Redmiles & Wenrich, supra note 573 at 134.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(as well as race) are subject to strict scrutiny. Court stated: “These factors are so seldom relevant to the achievement of any legitimate state interest that laws grounded in such considerations are deemed to reflect prejudice and antipathy – a view that those in the burdened class are not as worthy or deserving as others. For these reasons, and because such discrimination is unlikely to be soon rectified by legislative means, these laws are subjected to strict scrutiny, and will be sustained only if they are suitably tailored to serve a compelling state interest.”589</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1986</td>
<td>Tax Reform Act of 1986: (1) CFCs: Lowered the shareholding thresholds required for a foreign corporation to qualify as CFC, thereby expanding the scope of CFC taxation.590</td>
<td>Act of Nov. 14, 1986: Amends Section 349 of the Immigration and Nationality Act to make clear that an action, to result in loss of citizenship, needs to be performed voluntarily and with the intention of</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

589 473 U.S. at 440. See supra notes 147-148 and accompanying text.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Revenue Ruling 90-79:596</td>
<td>U.S. Department of States “Advice about Possible Loss of U.S. Citizenship and Dual Nationality;” Adoption of the administrative presumption that a U.S. citizen does not want to lose U.S.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ruled that persons who sell their home outside the United States are subject to tax on any “phantom income” that may result because of changes in the value of the currency with which the home</td>
<td>giving up U.S. citizenship.595</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(2) PFICs: First PFIC rules imposing penalizing taxation on foreign mutual funds.591 The effect was to “wall off” U.S. investors from non-U.S. mutual funds.592</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(3) Functional currency: Established the U.S. dollar as the functional currency for all individuals, including those who live outside the United States.593 As a result, for Americans living overseas, currency fluctuations create U.S. dollar capital gains or losses on daily transactions as well as on movements of short- and long-term investments done in local currencies.594</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

591 Tax Reform Act of 1986 at § 1235, 100 Stat. at 2566-76.
592 See John C. Coates IV, Reforming the Taxation and Regulation of Mutual Funds: A Comparative Legal and Economic Analysis, 1 J. LEGAL ANALYSIS 591, 611 (2009).
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>was purchased and sold as compared to the U.S. dollar. This unrealized income cannot be offset against any actual losses incurred in the foreign currency in connection with the sale of the home. 597</td>
<td>citizenship even though performing a potentially expatriating act. 598 As a result of this presumption, the only way to effectively prove loss of U.S. citizenship is via the issuance by the Department of State of a Certificate of Loss of Nationality (CLN). 599</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1992</td>
<td>Ratification by the United States of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (ICCPR). Contains the rights: (i) to leave any country, including one’s own, (ii) to return to one’s country; and (iii) to equal protection of the law and to be protected from discrimination based on national origin, birth, or other status. 600</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1994</td>
<td>Ratification by the United States of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (ICERD). Contains the rights: (i) to leave any country,</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

598 See James supra note 539 at 895 n.169; Worster, Renouncing, supra note 5 at 3. HerZog, supra note 525 at 108-09.

599 Worster, Renouncing, supra note 5 at 4; see 22 CFR § 50.40.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Small Business Jobs Protection Act: Foreign trusts: Clarified the definition of foreign trust with the effect of creating a bias towards treating a trust as a foreign trust, Increased and made more complex the reporting requirements for foreign trusts, subject to harsh penalties for failure to report.603 Work Opportunity Tax Credit: First enactment of WOTC; eligibility limited to employers and employees located in United States.604</td>
<td>including one’s own, (ii) to return to one’s country; (iii) to nationality, and (iv) to equal protection of the law and to be protected from discrimination based on national origin.601 the affected individuals, to society and to the structure of government itself.602</td>
<td>Romer v. Evans: Court struck down a state (Colorado) constitutional amendment forbidding the state and local governments from adopting laws seeking to protect gay men and lesbians from discrimination. Court observed: “the amendment seems inexplicable by anything but animus towards the class it affects.”605</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1996</td>
<td>Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996: Expatriation: Expanded tax penalties for expatriation.606</td>
<td>Created a presumption that expatriation</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

605 517 U.S. 620, 632. See supra note 261 and accompanying text.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>is for tax avoidance purposes if expatriate’s income tax or net worth surpassed specified amounts. Instituted “Quarterly Publication of Individuals Who Have Chosen to Expatriate” (also referred to as the “Name and Shame List”).&lt;sup&gt;607&lt;/sup&gt; Reed Amendment (contained in the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996): Expatriation: Sought to bar entry into the United States of former U.S. citizens who are determined have renounced U.S. citizenship for the purpose of avoiding taxation by the United States.&lt;sup&gt;608&lt;/sup&gt;</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2001</td>
<td>Patriot Act: Access to financial accounts in the United States: Imposed on U.S. financial institutions increased diligence obligations (“know your client”).&lt;sup&gt;609&lt;/sup&gt;</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Many institutions have interpreted the Patriot Act as prohibiting them from opening or maintaining accounts for persons living outside the United States. As a result, many Americans living overseas are unable to have a U.S. account or are subject to the constant threat of the closure of their account(s).610

2004

American Jobs Creation Act:
(i) CFCs: Allowed U.S. shareholders of CFCs a one-time 85% dividend received deduction. It was limited to cash dividends received from CFCs. A taxpayer that wanted to apply for the deduction was required to present a qualified reinvestment plan in the United States, thus overseas taxpayers could not benefit.611
(ii) Financial Account Reporting: Significantly increased FBAR penalties, including the imposition of criminal penalties.611

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>tion of a non-wilful penalty of up to $10,000 per violation.612  (iii) Expatriation: Expanded the application of the expatriation tax; eliminated the motive test for application of the tax; increased filing requirements and penalties for failure to file.613</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2008</td>
<td>Heroes Earnings Assistance and Relief Tax Act of 2008:  Expatriation: Created section 877(a) imposing exit tax upon those who renounce U.S. citizenship and whose assets or income exceed certain values, regardless of motive for renunciation. Referred to as “covered expatriates,” they are treated as if they had liquidated all their assets on the date prior to their expatriation. They are assessed tax based upon the net gain and regardless of any actual sale of the assets.614</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 2010 | Hiring Incentives to Restore Employment (HIRE) Act:
(i) Financial Account Reporting: Adoption of FATCA, imposing additional reporting requirements with respect to foreign financial accounts on both US persons and foreign financial institutions, and imposing steep penalties in event of non-compliance.\footnote{615}
(ii) PFICs: Established a separate annual filing requirement for each PFIC owned by a U.S. person, even if there is no income to report.\footnote{616} | Memorandum for the Attorney General Re: Applicability of Federal Criminal Laws and the Constitution to Contemplated Lethal Operations Against Shaykh Anwar al-Aulaqi:
Offered a legal basis under which the Executive Branch may, in the absence of charges or a trial, order the killing of a U.S. citizen located outside the United States.\footnote{617}
One year later (2011) the United States killed three U.S. citizens, including the one named in this memorandum and his 16-year-old son, in two drone strikes in Yemen.\footnote{618} | |

\footnote{616} HIRE Act § 521, 124 Stat. at 112.
\footnote{619} Public Notice 7068, Schedule of Fees for Consular Services, Department of State and Overseas Embassies and Consulates, 75 Fed. Reg. 36522-35 (June 28, 2010).}
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
| 2013 |          |             | United States v. Windsor: Court held that the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) violated the equal protection component of the 5th Amendment’s due process clause because it was founded in animus: “the avowed purpose and practical effect of [DOMA] are to impose a disadvantage, a separate status, and so a stigma upon all who enter into same-sex marriages.”
| 2014 | Financial Account Reporting:
Majority of Intergovernmental Agreements (IGAs) implementing FATCA are signed in 2013-14 (approximately 60 countries)
Schedule of Fees for Consular Services, Department of State and Overseas Embassies and Consulates—Visa and Citizenship Services Fee Changes (Public Notice: 8850):
Raised fee for issuance of CLN from $450 to $2,350 |
| 2015 | Fixing America’s Surface Transportation (FAST) Act:
Established the authority for the Secretary of State to revoke a U.S. citizen’s passport upon receipt of certification by the Secretary of the Treasury of the U.S. citizen’s “seriously delinquent tax debt” ($50,000) |

---

622 Public Notice: 8850, Schedule of Fees for Consular Services, Department of State and Overseas Embassies and Consulates—Visa and Citizenship Services Fee Changes, 79 Fed. Reg. 51247-54 (2014). See supra note 419 regarding the State Department’s announcement of its intention to reduce this fee back to $450. However, no timeline for implementing the reduction has been proposed.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>National Taxpayer Advocate Annual Report to Congress; Documents the closure of the last four remaining IRS attaché offices located in U.S. consulates overseas (down from 15 in the 1980s). With these closures overseas Americans lost all access to in-person IRS assistance.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2015</td>
<td>Consolidated Appropriations Act, 2016: Enactment of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights. Requires the IRS Commissioner to ensure that IRS employees are familiar with and act in accord with taxpayer rights. This includes, among other rights, the right to a fair and just tax system.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2016</td>
<td>Treasury Decision 9806: PFICs: Finalization of highly complex regulations establishing PFIC ownership and reporting rules. Requires a separate, highly complex, Form 8621 to be filed for each PFIC owned. Establishes low de minimis thresholds for the application of the annual filing requirement (value of $25,000 or $5,000). Exempts from the annual reporting requirement “dual resident taxpayers” who are treated as residents of another country; U.S. citizens living overseas do not qualify for this exemption.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

624 NAT’L TAXPAYER ADVOC., 2015 ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS, vol. 1, 72, 74-76 (Dec. 2015). See Snyder et al., Mission Impossible, supra note 94 at 1832 (explaining that domestic taxpayers in the United States have access to 358 Taxpayer Assistance Centers (TACs) and approximately 11,000 Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) and Tax Counseling for the Elderly (TCE) programs).

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>IRS:</td>
<td>IRS launched online tool to enable taxpayers to access account information. Use of the tool requires a U.S. cell phone number together with a U.S. credit card or U.S. loan number. These requirements bar most overseas Americans from using the tool.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2017</td>
<td>Tax Cuts &amp; Jobs Act: CFCs: Instituted: (i) a retroactive tax on a CFC’s earnings accumulated from 1987 through 2017, and (ii) an ongoing tax on the corporation’s earnings from 2018 forward. Taxes are imposed not on the CFC, but on its U.S. citizen shareholder(s), regardless of whether the corporation has made any distribution. The name of the ongoing tax is Global Intangible Low-Taxed Income, or “GILTI.” Filing threshold: Suspended the personal exemption for tax years 2018-2025, effectively reducing it to zero. As a result, taxpayers using the status married filing separately (MFS) are re-</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

629 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act at § 14201, 131 Stat. at 2208.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2020</td>
<td>Required to file a tax return if their income is as low as $5 and even when they have no tax liability. This has a disproportionate effect on overseas taxpayers because they file MFS at a higher rate than domestic taxpayers (17.64% as compared to 2.09%).</td>
<td>Additional Policy and Regulatory Revisions in Response to the Covid-19 Public Health Emergency: 243-page document describing how Federal funding and other Federal government resources will be used to make Covid-19 vaccinations available to all Americans residing in the United States, free of charge. No provision is made for Americans residing outside the United States. This failure of equal protection is underscored in the White House document “National Strategy for the Covid-19 Response and Pandemic Preparedness” (2021), which announced the intention for “all Americans [to be] vaccinated quickly.” At the time this document was published.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>TAXATION</th>
<th>CITIZENSHIP</th>
<th>EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>lished. U.S. Consulates around the world had already posted on their websites: “The United States government does not plan to provide Covid-19 vaccinations to private U.S. citizens overseas. U.S. citizens traveling or residing abroad should follow host country developments and guidelines for Covid-19 vaccination.”634</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2020</td>
<td></td>
<td>suspension by U.S. Department of State of most immigrant and U.S. citizen services by consulates around the world. As a result, those seeking to renounce U.S. citizenship are unable to do so.635</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2021</td>
<td>American Rescue Plan Act of 2021636 and Revenue Procedure 2021-23637</td>
<td>Limits the availability of the increased Child Tax Credit payments to parents who maintain a home</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Year | TAXATION | CITIZENSHIP | EQUAL PROTECTION / DUE PROCESS
---|---|---|---
| in the United States for more than half of the taxable year.\(^{638}\) | Some U.S. consulates resume renunciation services, but with wait times as long as 18 months.\(^{639}\) One estimate suggests there is a backlog of 30,000 Americans waiting to renounce.\(^{640}\) | Students for Fair Admissions v. Harvard

The Court held that race-based admissions policies at two U.S. universities violated the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. In explaining that the policies were inherently suspect and subject to strict scrutiny, the majority as well as two concurring opinions made clear that race and nationality are inextricably linked. “Antipathy” towards such distinctions, the Court explained, is “deeply ‘rooted in our Nation’s constitutional and demographic history.’”\(^{641}\)

---

\(^{640}\) Pilkington, supra note 635. See also Helen Burggraf, Published Report Stating That Up to 30,000 U.S. Expats Are ‘Unable’ to Renounce Their Citizations Goes Globally Viral, AM. EXPAT FIN. NEWS J. (JAN. 3, 2022).

\(^{641}\) No. 20–1199 (U.S. 2023) (slip op.). See supra notes 149-154 and accompanying text.